An advertisement in this morning's STAI furnishes us information that an excursion will be given next Wednesday under the auspices of the Whiting Rifles. The Italian String Band has been engaged for the occasion, and no doubt those who indulge in dancing will have an opportunity to gratify that propensity. A feature of the trip will be the indulgence in target practice by the pirited military organization in whose interest the enterprise is undertaken. One word: The "Rifles" should have their courage and their treasury streagthened by generous patronage.

Safely Anchored. Cable advices received here yesterday conveyed the pleasant intelligence of the safe arrival at Bremerhaven, Germany, of Mrs. H. G. Hashagen, her two children and Mrs. H. Vollers and son, all of this city, who left here a short time since for a visit to native land. We care not whether they are domiciled in Altstadt or Neustadt; whether they are viewing the Cathedral built in 1160: the Church of St. Augustus, with a spire 325 feet in height; or boating on the Weser; the glad fact is, that the party is safe across the waters.
