with the prospects in Maine. He would not be surprised if the election of Governor went finally to the Legislature. The canvass is not on finances but on the old worn-out war issues. He says that Forster will certainly carry Ohio, because financial questions lead in the canvass. Exactly. The Democrats have two war candidates, and Forster merely sold calico during the uppleasantness. That explains the difference.

It may shock some of our brethren of the quill, but really we feel called upon at this melting time to give it as our opinion that "Professor Tice" is a humbug. Trial of Henry E. Schriver for the -Acquittal of the Prisoner.

In the Criminal Court yesterday morning the case of H. E. Schriver, of Castle Hayne, in this county, charged with the killing of William Jones, colored, on the night of the 26th of July, was taken up. After the usual preliminaries the jury were called, commencing with the regular panel and ending with the special venire of fifty men ordered by the Court to be summoned. Both were exhausted and only ten jurymen had been selected, when another special cenire W. G. Jones, Benjamin Farrow, Sr., Frank Garrason, E. J. Eagan, Joseph Sharpless, B. R. King, L. H. Bryant, Geo. L. Schutt

Henry Sholar. After the jury had been regularly sworn in, the examination of witnesses commenced. The main witness for the State as well as the defence was John Dudley. colored, who, with Schriver and the deceased, formed the party who started upon that fatal search after Randal Jordan which resulted in the shooting of William Jones. His testimony was to the effect that on the evening in question he met the prisoner at the bar and William Jones at the store of Mr. Claus Schriver; that some one had been telling that Randal Jordan, the escaped prisoner, had been seen going across Mr. Schriver's field in the direction of his house, &c. At the outset, however, witness explained that Jordan had been arraigned before Justice Grady on the Saturday previous on the charge of assault and battery, and a commitment had been issued against him for the costs, and the prisoner had been placed in the custody of young Schriver, who was township constable. Jordan made his escape the same evening, and nothing more was heard of him until the night of the 26th of July. When it was mentioned that Jordan had gone in the direction of his house, Jones made the remark that now was the time to take him, and advised Schriver to summon "Dudley and his gun," as he expressed it, to help in the matter. Schriver secordingly summoned John Dudley and William Jones to go with him and look for Jordan. Arrived at a point on the county road, about fifty or sixty steps from the house, they halted, when it was proposed that they should go and peep through the cracks and see if Jordan was there. All three thereupon approached the house, looked through the cracks, and saw that Jordan was at home. They then withdrew to the same spot on the road for further consultation, after which they returned to the house, took another observation, and then withdrew for consultation again. This time the question arose as to whether they should shoot the prisoner if he should try to escape, and Schriver said there was no use in shooting unless he was coming at them or about to escape, and if it was found necessary to shoot at the prisoner at case of sunstroke yesterday, but it didn't all they should shoot him in the legs. At Jones' suggestion Schriver then took his station at the spot on the county road where they had been consulting, and Dudley and deceased again went to the house. Jordan was seated in the back door, with his family about him. Dudley, raising his gun and presenting it at Jordan, said, 'What now?" when Jones knocked or pushed his weapon down. At the same moment Jordan stepped out into the yard s few feet from where the men were standing and drew from his pocket something that looked like a pistol, whereupon Jones exclaimed, "My God, look at that?" and started in a run for the road. Schriver saw him approaching with a large "horseman's" pistol in his hand and supposed it to be Jordan. He shouled to him four different times to halt, but no attention was paid to the warning, and finally, > when Jones was within about twenty-five steps from him, he fired and deceased fell to the ground. Schriver then shouted to Dudley and Jones that he had shot Randal Jordan, but upon further investigation i was found that he had killed Jones. The testimony of the other witnesses threw very little additional light upon the subject, > further than to show that none but the most friendly relations had always existed between the prisoner at the bar and the deceased. All the witnesses were introduced by the State, the defence relying upon their testimony for an acquittalle gamesic Hon. D. L. Russell assisted Marsden
