More About the Presbyterian Church

The work of erecting the scaffolding around the First Presbyterian Church steeple has been completed, and several of our venturesome citizens have been to the top of it. Among these was Sergeant George W. W. Davis, of the police force, who says the view from the giddy height was grand in the extreme. The ocean and sounds could be seen distinctly, and also Fort Fisher and other points in that vicinity; but Smithville was hid from view by a clump of thick woods in the neighborhood of

The matter of the bees and the honey was examined into, and the "bee-hive" was found to be a wasp nest, upon making which discovery the investigation was not pushed any farther for obvious reasons.

The weather-vane has been ren from the steeple, and now lies in the church-yard. It looked very small and unpretending up so near the clouds, but it is quite large when viewed in its present position, being seven feet and three inches in length.

Some reckless individual ascended the scaffolding to the very top, about dusk on Friday evening, after Mr. Ottaway and his men had left, and yesterday there was some talk of putting on a guard to keep people from risking their lives in making the as-
