The following is a list of those who were there afternoon. from this place: Col. John W. Atkinson, Mrs. Atkinson, Miss Fannie R. Williams, Miss Lula Atkinson, Miss Emma D. Murchison, Miss Jennie Atkinson, and Messrs.

John D. Williams, Jr., James G. Bradley, Charles G. Mitchell, Thomas H. McKoy, Jr., and Duncan M. Williams. All returned except Mesars. Bradley and McKoy.

The appearance of the party showed very plainly that they had had a rough experience, their outfits being decidedly unique and variegated. The most striking feature of the costumes of the ladies was their hats, the brims of which extended about three feet from the crown and made them present quite a ludicreus appearance. Miss Fannie Williams was fortunate enough to recover all of her jewelry and money and some clothes, her trunk having washed ashore. Messrs. D. M. Williams and Thomas H. McKoy, Jr., also saved or recovered their clothes, but the former lost a fine gold watch and chain. The rest of the party lost nearly everything, the ladies a large amount of jewelry, including two gold watches.

From conversations with several, we gather that the guests, with a few exceptions. had all retired by 2 A. M., at which time the storm had commenced in earnest, but was in its incipiency, as it afterwards proved. The two or three gentlemen who did not retire at 2 o'clock became soon convinced that the gale was to be of unusual force and severity, and woke some of their friends to enjoy the excitement. A little later several suggested that it would probably be as well to arouse all the guests, of his actions during the excitement, in un selfishly seeking always to aid others at the risk of his own life.

Mr. Hughes was only 23 years of age, and was young man of unexceptional characa ter. Brave, genereus and courteous, he was at once liked on meeting him. All who knew him regret his untimely death, and sympathize with his bereaved family. The body was interred at Newbern yesterday

Advices received last night state that another body was also found yesterday afternoon, which was identified as that of W. Henry Congleton, a resident of Beaufort and a fisherman by occupation. It is supposed he was lost in the same manner as was Mr. Hughes.

All accounts agree in stating that every man worked bravely and unhesitatingly towards rescuing those unable to help thems selves, but we will not mention names where all were so conspicuous, well satis fied that those from Wilmington acted as became them, although they do not now take any special credit to themselves.

Incident of the Storm.

In the country, about four miles, from this city, during the storm of Monday morning last, a large tree blew down on the kitchen, in which a colored man was sleeping, crushing the building. The man was aroused by the falling timbers and cleared the building at one bound, when, finding the yard strewn with fallen trees, he went into the house. The iumstes, thirteen in number, were all up when he entered, being on the eve of leaving the building, which they expected every moment would be hurled from its foundations.

The wreck of the kitchen and the appearance of the darkey, who was frantic with fright, having been awakened from a deep sleep, added to the alarm of those in the house, and they hurriedly vacated the same, some taking refuge in the cow-pen, and others crawling into an empty hogshead in the yard, from which they emerged monthly amateur paper just started at Point Caswell, O. Robbery of a Steamer-An Arrest and Discharge-"Lemonade Jim" in Trouble Again.

Mr. James Dolan, of the steam yacht Gevernor's Island, which put in here in distress a few days ago, made complaint yesterday morning to the effect that his room on the boat was entered, some time in the carly part of Tuesday night, and robbed of several articles, including three white shirts. one undershirt, three studs, one razor, one time book, one engineer's lance, and a letter from George W. Quintard, the latter of which may lead to the detection of the thief. He made affidavit to the effect that he had reason to believe that Jim Clark, otherwise known as "Lemonade Jim," had stolen the articles, as he had been around the boat a good deal since her arrival in would fill a volume. port and going errands frequently for those belonging on board the steamer. On this affidavit "Lemonade Jim" was arrested and lodged in the guard house. Subsequently, on the representation of Mr. Dolan, that he believed the articles were at the house of a woman on an alley between Front and Second and Dock and Orange streets, a search warrant was issued and the premises visited by an officer, who failed to discover any of the stolen property. Mr. Dolan interviewed John Clark in the guard house and told him that he would not prosecute him if he would tell him where the articles were, but Jim persistently denied knowing anything about them, and argued that this community and the people of the United States generally had somehow imbibed very peculiar and exceedingly erroneous ideas as to his moral
