For the past two or three weeks different ministers of the city have been in daily attendance upon the doomed man in his prison cell, endeavoring, to bring him to a sincere repentance of his sins, and especially of the grievous one for which he was so soon to suffer. He appeared anxious to experience relief from the heavy burden of condemnation that weighed down his soul, but it was not until a few hours before his execution that he was able to say that all was well with him. Notwithstanding the fact that the execution was to be strictly private, about two thousand persons, principally colored, assembled on Fourth and Princess streets. in the vicinity of the jail, many of them standing there for two hours or more, eagerly waiting and watching to get a glimpse of the condemned man as he was taken from the aidedoor of the prison to the scaffold. During this time a colored woman got to shouting very lustily, and created considerable excitement among the colored people. Many of the latter class of the population were loud in their condemnation of the privacy attending the execution, whilst others were noising it around that those who went in had to pay, twentyfive cents for a ticket of admission.

tickets were admitted to the jail enclosure, and nearly all of them proceeded at once to inspect the gallows. This was erected immediately in the rear of the jail, and was so enclosed that only those inside and upon the platform could witness the execution. The enclosure was about fifteen by twelve feet and the platform was reached by a flight of steps. In the centre of this platform was a trap door four feet square, working upon hinges, and when closed resting upon a wooden bolt which was withdrawn by working a lever at the head of the flight of stairs. The Sheriff and his assistants arranged the rope-a half-inch new manills, well lubricated-so as to give the condemned man a fall of eight feet. At 12 o'clock Mathis was brought out of the jail and mounted the steps to the platform, attended by the jailor and the colored ministers who had been with him all the morning. He was a bright, intelligent looking young negro, brown in color, and apparently about 30 years of age. His arms were tied and he was dressed in jacket and pants of brown jeans, which were new and apparently provided for the occasion: but he was bare-headed and his shoes were old and worn. He mounted the steps quietly and without assistance, but when he reached the platform and saw the preparations made for his death, his color

Reuben Herring had abandoned Lucy about the time that I first became intimate with her. Lucy came to my house with Tom Haves on a Sunday, the very day of the mur-der. Tom Hayes wrote a letter for her and left. Tom Hayes had left about three or four minutes when I came out on the piazza and discovered a man in the bushes. I went back in the house and got a gun and walked out in the field. I told him not to come to me. He came up cursing and swearing, and drew back his stick and struck at me. I fended the blow off with the gun, walking backwards until got a chance to run, and he ran after me. I ran into the house and threw the gun down; then grabbed an axe and struck him with it about the hip the first blow; he advanced on me and I struck him about the head as he was coming up to me. As I dealt him the third blow he fell to the ground. I let him lie there about fifteen minutes, and then he was about dead. I took him up then and buried him in the well, and Lucy said, "Let's hide him, and if you will not tell it I will not do it." And then I said, "Well, if you don't I will not;" and then she went home and came back and prevailed upon me if I would never tell it she would not. I saw her several times atterwards, and she would tell me to "Keep it! Keep it!" About five weeks afterwards I saw her, and she said to me that they were going to arrest her about it At 11 A.
