The Alarm of Fire Yesterday.

Yesterday, about 12 o'clock, a dense volume of smoke was discovered issuing from an old building on the premises of the Mc-Ree house, on Second, between Market and Princess streets. The fire was found to be among a lot of straw and other combustible material, on the second floor, and the smoke was so thick and stifling that some of the first who ascended the stairway, being urged on by others below them, came near being suffocated. The fire was getting good headway when discovered, and would probably have resulted disastrously, but by rived early on the ground the flames were see him, but the latter spoke of his house as quickly extinguished.

Col. Prentiss Ingraham's new play, written for Buffalo Bill, was submitted at the Opera House last evening to public criticism for the second time. It is essentially a drama of the plains, yet far above the average in plot, in situations and in dialogue. These merits were brought out by a company of more than the excellence ordinarily found in performances of this particular character. Last evening 'The Knight of the Plains' was presented with special scenery, good costuming, and a spice of reality was added by the introduction in the opening act of a troupe of Nez Perce and Pawnee Indians and their interpreters. The galleries were crowded, as might have been anticipated; but for that matter so were the dress and parquette circles, and indicative that Buffalo Bill and his combined novelties in his new drama has a fascination for adults as well as the youthful portion of the community.

The Lecture To-Morrow Night. We again remind our readers of the rare intellectual treat in store for them at the Opera House, to-morrow night, on which oocasion Col. D. K. McRae will deliver his promised lecture on Poetry for the benefit of the Wilmington Library Association. We are told that this lecture will be a remarkable one even for such a speaker as Col. McRae, whose reputation as a lecturer is exceeded by few. His theme is a fruitful one, and we learn that he is expected to be especially happy and entertaining in his treatment of it. Let all, therefore, who wish to enjoy an evening of unalloyed pleasure be present at the Opera House tomorrow night.

Tax Matters. As a matter of some interest we give here a statement of the amount of State tax paid by the townships outside of the city. The entire State tax collected for 1879, as we have before stated, was $16,412.42. The tax collected outside of the city footed up $1,652.68; from which dednet $129.83, the amount paid by the Wilmington Railroad Bridge Company, listed in Cape Fear Township, making the tax on property $1,523.35. Of this amount there was paid by citizens of Wilmington $809.61, leaving $713.44 paid by citizens of the four townships outside of

Some weeks since Ben James called at the City Hall, and asked for protection. Chief of Police Brock asked him to state his grievances, and he proceeded with a long rigmarole about hearing strange whisperings or incantaof water were placed at the door; that the spring from which the family obtained their drinking water was conjured or poisoned, &c. They have also been to Justice Millis on several occasions with their complaints, and a week or two ago the woman had a peace warrant sworn out against Lewis LeGrand, a respectable colored man in their neighborhood, alleging that she had distinguished his voice around the house at night, breathing out threats, etc. The case was heard by Justice Millis and the charges found to be entirely without foun-

A night or two afterwards LeGrand's house was burnt, together with Mt. Olive Church adjoining, though we do not pretend to say that it was through their agency. Tho Chief of Police and Justice Millis have ried to reason with them on the subject, but they will not listen to it. Dr. Walker, the city physician, called to see them, but was refused admittance, and since Saturday last the family have been barricaded inside their house and will not admit any one. They have a wire stretched on the fence surrounding the house, as if intended to afford them protection, and keep two severe dogs on the premises. A brother of the well directed efforts of those who ar. James, from Brunswick county, called to his castle, and alluded to the consequences port. The building in which the fire originated of its invasion, or any attempt to interfere protection against witchcraft. Some of the police were sent to the house Monday night, but could not gain admittance without breaking in the door, which they did not consider themselves warranted to do. A party called at Justice Millis' residence the same night for a writ to obtain admittance, but the Justice declined to interfere in the matter under the circumstances as they then existed.

The family consists of James, his wife and two small children. The man has been in the employ of Mr. A. H. VanBokkelen for sometime past as a drayman, and has always been considered an industrious and trusty employe.

Talks of conjuration are also heard among some of the colored people in 'Brooklyn." One couple, particularly, who have a son whose limbs have been drawn out of shape, most probably by rheumatism, insist upon it that the deformity is the result of conjuration.

Yesterday afternoon the Chief of Police sent Sergeant Davis and Officer Kendrick to the house of Ben James, with instructions to force their way into the building, if necessary, and bring the parties to the station house, as it was feared that the misguided and ignorant man and woman might allow themselves and children to perish of hunger. The officers proceeded to perform the duty, and while taking the family from the house a crowd of one hundred and fifty or two hundred people, mostly colored, gathered in the vicinity, and the most of them followed in the wake of the officers and their prisoner on their way to the guard house. James and his wife offered no resistance, though a double-barrel gun was found sitting in a corner of the

During a brief interview with James and his wife, after their arrival at the station house, they alluded to their apprehensions of mortal injury from sources which they could not explain. James pretended that he was not so much alarmed on his own account, but he was afraid to leave his wife by herself for a moment, and had stopped work to remain by her side. His wife said that she put the silver in her bucket when she went to the spring, hoping that, with God's assistance, it might serve as a protection to her. They are evidently sincere in their belief that they are to be the victims of conjuration unless something can bedone to prevent it. The children devoured the food put before them as if they had been at the point of starvation.

Fennell lost his entire crop of corn and fodder and about half of his crop of peas, the other half of the latter being stacked in the field. He also lost all his farming utensils. He saved his horse and buggy, which were in the lower part of the building. The fire caught on the top of the barn and was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary. He had $400 insurance on his barn and crop together, in a company represented by Messrs. W. L. Smith & Co.
