EVENING EDITION.

There are some reforms suggested by the English Liberals that may not be reforms after all. They have either adopted, or are talking of adopting, the American system of nominating conventions. This may prove a very great mistake. Under their system there is no such political instrumentality as a "machine" by which to misgovern and to cheat the plastic and unsuspecting voter.

An able Republican paper, the Philadelphia Weekly Notes, which is evidently thoroughly disgusted with the corruptions and abuses of the American "machine," says of the English system:

"The English system differs from our own in making but small demand upon the time and the attention of the people, and yet using the time and attention it does demand to the best purpose. A vote for Par-liament covers everything. It does not therefore require the existence of a class of professional politicians to relieve the people at large of onerous and exacting duties not to take advantage of any Neither does it provide for the existence of such a class by having the members defects in the bill to swindle the of its civil service liable to removal for political reasons, or by requiring State. We are much obliged to that they be reelected at the expiration of him for this assurance, and trust a few years. They are in for 'life on good behaviour,' from the judge on the bench down to the tidewaiter. They devote just as much attention to politics as they feel he may be as good as his word. We would have felt hapinclined to give; they contribute to the expier-more comfortable, more aspenses of a campaign as much and as little sured, if it had been so "nominated in as they choose. It is not necessary to enact Political Assessment Laws for their prothe bond" or bill of sale. The News, tection. Even in office they remain free his metropolitan organ, says of his citizens.

The Liberals also propose to make a change with reference to the duration of Parliaments. The present law was enacted in 1715. Prior to that time a Parliament could only live for three years. Under the law as it is it can extend to seven years. All Americans of intelligence know how expensive is a general election. Business becomes deranged, productions are less, sectional antagonisms and personal bitterness increase, the whole country becomes excited, and people generally allow the worst passions to dominate them. So disastrons are general elections that the wisest men in our country regard them as a curse instead of a blessing. Many of our most thoughful people favor the election of President for a term of six years instead of four, and to make him inelligible to office ever thereafter. The Southern Confede. racy wisely incorporated this feature into its Constitution.

The term of seven years for the off his mental balance. No sane man well in England. It is not perfect, ited to him by some of the Raleigh but it has answered a better purpose than the old three years system. The law was changed to keep out the Stuarts who had proved such a curse. The Tories have tried repeatedly to restore the old law. If the Liberals should now favor it a very doubtful change will be made. The English Radicals, during all of their agitations for reform, have steadfastly demanded a shortening of the term. They had six planks in their platform. Of these two have been adopted by
