EVENING EDITION

THE RALEIGH NEWS AND THE

Capt. Jarvis was a traitor when it was believed that he was one of the chosen leaders of "the noble little band." He will not believe that he voted for the special tax-bonds except upon strong evidence. The Journals of the House ought to show conclusively how Capt. Jarvis voted. The News complains that the STAR copied another charge, to-wit, that Capt. Jarvis failed to vote some two hundred times, &c. We give the explanation very willingly. It is that he did not vote because it was a sort of tactics resorted to in order that oppressive legislation might be defeated. The STAR of course does not remember Jarvis's votes-how many times he voted and how many times he failed to vote. It was a surprise to learn that he had not voted, but the reason therefor was not known to us until given by the News. We give Capt. Jarvis the benefit of the explanation. We have seen and heard other charges, of a more serious character against Gov. Jarvis, but we did not publish them. We were unwilling to believe them true, and we hoped they had no foundation in fact. We will take leave to add that our recollection of the carpet-bag days did- not prepare us to hear anything derogatory of Capt. Jarvis. We supposed that in-1868-'69 he was all that his friends claim for him-a true Democrat, with clean hands, battling for the right. In those days, as far as we now remember, we heard nothing, saw nothing, that was not to his credit. The STAR would be glad to approve as heartily of his administration as it approves of all it knows or remembers of his course in the dark and troublous days of 1868-'69. One word more. The owner of the STAR shapes its policy and controls its destiny. The opinions of the STAR are not the opinions of this on that member of the staff, and it is, therefore, not in good taste, to say be very reluctant to believe that have we no immense book concerns like Harper's or Appleton's? Simply because Wilmington is not New York. The reason the STAR 18 not as large, as enterprising, as able, as full of news as the Herald is, is because it is published in Wilmington and not in New York. It is just as unreasonable to demand that the Purcell House shall be as large and as complete as the Fifth Avenue Hotel, as it is to demand that a paper be published here that shall be judged by the standard of the greatest newspaper in the world. The whole thing is stupid, and is not worth the consideration we have given it. We have merely shot at folly as it flies.

In the April number of the British Quarterly Review we find a few points we note for the benefit of our readers. It says, and very justly, that Robert Hall was "the greatest of modern English preachers," and refers specially to his "philosophical thought and measured eloquence." It says of Edmund Clarence Sted man that he is "one of the most versatile and artistic poets of America,' and refers to the "power and grace" of his "Lyrics and Idylls." Another American author, Henry James, Jr., is spoken of very highly. It does not think his "Confidence" up to his high standard. It strikes us, if we may presume to say it, as being admirably written, and far more interesting than another novel of his we once read in part.

Among the many novels of the preceding quarter singled out for commendation are the following, and novel readers may make a note and read accordingly: "Magnum Bonum," by Charlotte M. Yonge; "Queen of the Meadow," by Charles Gibbon; "In the Sweet Springtime," by Katherine S. Macquoid; "Mademoiselle de Mersac," by W. E. Norris; and "Mary Browne," by L. E.

the least, to single out a particular Among volumes of sermons it specially commends are those by Dr.

THE LATEST NEWS. tions of eighteen centuries and the belief of the whole civilized world. His entire lecture was a tirade against the imaginary weaknesses of the Christian religion. He has not one word to say of its moral grandeur, its sublime charity, its benign influence upon the civilization of this and other ages. - Baltimore Gazette.

----- It is now reasonably clear that the issue of the present struggle over the Republican Presidential nomination will depend to a large degree upon the action of the National Convention on the unit rule. If it shall abrogate the well-established principle of its own organization, that' it is a body composed of representatives from each Congressional District and delegates at large from the several States, then, of course, it will enable Logan, Cameron and Conkling to cast the votes of the delegates of Illinois, Pennsylvania and New York solidly for Grant. If, on the other hand, it shall sustain the vital principle of its organization, and, in accordance with he well-established precedents, assure to each delegate the right to vote according to the instructions of his district, the State bosses will be shorn of their strength, and the true preferences of the delegates will determine the selection of a candidate. It is impossible for the Convention to avoid this issue, nor is it desirable that it should; for upon its decision must depend not only the result of the present contest, but the future welfare of the party.-Baltimore American, Rep.

OUR STATE CONTEMPORARIES.

The contract which Best & Company signed, expressly declares "that no damage shall be recoverable against said grantees, or either of them, for any breach of this contract." Was such a thing ever heard of before in a transaction of this magnitude? A State turns over millions of public property to individuals, exacting no security or guarantees, except their word and honor, and expressly stipulating with them that they may forfeit as much as they please, without any liability whatever for damages. This would seem to be placing a statutory and executive premium on rascality. It is us if the Governor should offer a reward for fraudulent transactions. No wonder there has been great secrecy about this business -Raleigh Post

If we are judicicus in cur nominations there is nothing to fear, but with a load to start with we may look for possible defeat. There are now at least two or three prominent Republican aspirants, men of ability and good canvassers, only biding the action of our Convention to determine whether they will enter the race. * * So it is vasily important that the Democratic party should select among its leaders a man of great ability, with extraordinary canvassing

STAR.

The STAR copied a brief extract from one of its exchanges in which it was charged that Gov. Jarvis, when a member of the Legislature, had voted for the special tax bonds. It was the purpose of the STAR, to give also the denial. Just as soon as the long editorial appeared in the News'in defence of the Governor, an editorial was prepared for the STAR in which it was stated that the Governor's organ strongly denied the charge and offered proof to sustain the denial. It was further said, that the STAR had written nothing concerning the truth or falsity of the charge, and inasmuch as the controversy as to the point raised promised to be heated and prolonged the STAR at present at least would take no part in it, and would give no opinion of its own. It wanted light-it wanted facts. The editorial referred to contained other matter, and because of it, for certain considerations, it was not published. The STAR recognizes the propriety of the heathen maxim-audi alteram partem. It may not approve of much that Goy. Jarvis has done, and it may not think his nomination the wisest and most popular, under the circumstances, but it will not be a party to any attack upon his record unless stating as much in defence as is given on the other side.

We very willingly mention that the News is making a strong fight in vindication of the Governor's legislative record, whilst he is being assailed by one or more correspondents of the Raleigh Observer. The STAR editorially has kept out of the fight of the various candidates for office because it did not care to ventilate the records of men of its own party, some of whom might be nominated. In thus remaining silent it did not mean to say thereby that it had no convictions of its own as to the best policy to be pursued and the most available candidates to be nominated. Gov. Jarvis and his friends ought rather to thank the STAR for withholding its hand than to be swift to seek a controversy with it.

person and undertake to place him or the stand as a witness. The News itself has been on both sides of several questions and has advocated an opposite policy to that which it now espouses since the year began. It would not be fair to hold the present editor responsible for such contradictions and inconsistencies. It would not be journalistic to parade some editorial utterance of the Observer of three years ago as the opinion of the News now. Individual writers are not machines. They have opinions of their own. They may think one kind of policy ought to be pursued in a given instance when the directing head thinks otherwise. The way to get the opinion of the STAR is to read its editorials. What the staff may have written years ago for other papers does not concern the STAR.

COMPARISONS.

Some men are very unreasonable. They expect a morning paper in a place of seventeen thousand inhabitants to be as large, as newsy, as diversified, and as able as the New poraries. York Herald, which is published in a city of over a million of inhabitants and has the world for its field and an immense fortune to back it. Quoth such complainers and critics, why spend your money for a little paper "with nothing in it" when you can get the Herald for three cents? A morning paper in Wilmington that gives more and later telegraphic news than any other paper in the State; that gives a fuller and completer digest of State intelligence thany any of its contemporaries; that gives all the important local news; that discusses thousands of topics in the course of the year, besides furnishing the comments of our is just. State contemporaries and current opinion from papers beyond the State, whilst giving full reports of home and other markets, cannot be said to fail in its duty even though it is a small sheet and very inferior to the "big dailies" in the big cities.

For fifteen cents a week-six successive mornings when the grumblers are asleep-this digest of news and of comments is delivered, and you are put in possession of all the im-

The Westminster has a fitting review of Masson's great "Life of Milton" in six octavo volumes. It is a monument of patient research and exhaustive labor. We have read but a part of it, but can bear testimony to its great excellence and value. It is the fashion in certain literary quarters now to deny the great merits of Macaulay. Prof. Seeley has done something to lessen the influence of the most splendid English writer since John Milton. We are pleased to see that the Westminster does not share in the detractions. It says, in a notice of "The Letters of Charles Dickens," that Macaulay was "the most brilliant and most successful of all" of the great novelist's contem-

It says of the British Premier :

"Whatever opinions may be held as to the political views of Mr. Gladstone, it would be impossible to deny that he stands in the first flight of not only living English statesmen, but of those who have been his predecessors in the guiding of Parliaments and the swaying of Cabinets. His is the name which posterity, careless as to party tenets, will be considered worthy to be preserved on the roll which boasts of a Walpole, a Chatham, a Pitt, a Peel and a Palmerston.'

Among the novels specially approved by the Westminster for the last quarter are the following: Gibbons's "Queen of the Meadow;" "From Generation to Generation," by Lady Noel; Norris's "Mademoiselle de Mersac"; "Tender and True," by W. A. Law. It says "Ouida's" novels do "nothing but harm." This
