Garfield's Letter.

Gen. Garfield's letter of acceptance is an excellent document of the kind. It is exceedingly well prepared. Smoothly and concisely written it speaks for itself, and invitingly before the reader what an admit politician conceives to be the most winning phases of politics, past and present.

It is not necessary to review at length all that he says. He presents so many issues it would be a long and tedious job to enter upon an examination of them all. For instance, his views upon State Rights are simply those of the latter-day Stewart who holds to a consolidated government and believes in speaking with a big N. Garfield's theory is not the theory of the framers; it is not the theory of the leaders in the various States when entering into the compact; it is not the theory of the wisest and best men whose learning, ability and public service have reflected honor upon the American people.

The best and shortest reply to Garfield's specious statement of the doctrine of the Stalwarts is contained in the extract from his friend Judge Black's letter to be found in the STAR of yesterday. Since the war began in 1861 the party in power has shown itself ready to abandon the good old paths of the forefathers and to set up new ones of its own making. It has done this in the conduct of the Republican party since 1865 to commend it to the kind consideration and endorsement of the people of all who really appreciate their rights and liberties and who are for a safe, constitutional, honest and economical administration of the General Government—we declare, in the very sincerity of our hearts, that we know not what it is. A party that has violated every promise that has prostituted to the basest ends the immense patronage of the Government; that has wasted and misapplied the public funds; that has corrupted the Nation and introduced into politics the most demoralizing, dangerous and revolutionary methods; that has stifled the voice of the people as expressed at the polls, robbed them of their choice, and by fraud, lying and villainy secured in the Presidential Chair a man who has never elected, can have no claim upon us or upon the great mass of the electors of the land who are honest, true to civil liberty, and opposed to all corruption, usurpation and buffooning. Garfield's deceptive phrases will catch no man who has a memory and who has lived through the last fifteen years.

Garfield is a Stewart. He is the man who said only a few years ago that he would not shake hands with any "Rebel" unless he acknowledged himself a traitor. He has are his words: "I would clap hands with those who fought against us, making my business and forgoing the past only on one condition—that it be omitted in patience, acknowledged in honesty, and used for the cause of freedom and wrong. Until this is accomplished my hand never grasp any Rebel's hand across any chasm, however small."

This is the fellow who now prates about in his address to the people, where he declares there is no freedom of opinion, and where men cannot exercise their political rights. There is not a Republican North Carolina who does not know that such a charge is false when applied to our own State. Gen. Garfield knows that where one man in the South is privileged from exercising the right of suffrage or of choice, there are one hundred in Massachusetts who are practically disfranchised, whilst thousands who are privileged to vote dare not exercise the right otherwise than in accordance with the orders of their employers, who deliver them Gen. Butler says, when they are on their knees ostentatiously at prayer.

From the general tone of what Garfield says of the South we have good reason to infer that if he should be unfortunately elected he will not continue Hayes's pacific policy towards the South, but will return to the Grant methods, and make Gen. de Trobriand and the support of the grand and the most important instruments in governing the refractory and insubordinate people. If he does not mean this what can he mean in the following: "The National Government should exercise all its constitutional authority to put an end to these evils, for all the people and all the States are members of one body, and one member can suffer without hurting the rest. The most serious evils which now afflict the South arise from the fact that there is no such freedom and co-operation of political opinion as the majority party can exercise an effective and wholesome control upon the party in power. Without such restraint party rule becomes tyrannical and corrupt."

Garfield justified Grant in all he did. He regarded his means as sanctified by the ends. He thought the usurper was only "exercising constitutional authority" when Grant broke up the Louisiana and South Carolina Legislatures and dragooned the South with his troops. Garfield has been a soldier on a somewhat small scale, and he would like to emulate the example of the Great Captain and try the bayonet and corporal "constitutional" system of "the man on horseback." Any man who endorsed all that Grant did cannot be trusted to perpetuate his own rule or that of his venal party. The man who could make such speeches as those quoted in to-day's paper is not a safe but a dangerous man. The extracts given in our two main editorials show him to be malignant, vengeful and intolerant. We are glad to have his comments until another day. We must remain upon an honest ballot, civil service, the tariff, &c., to which Garfield refers.

The statement contained in the italicized words is decidedly unfortunate in the light of Garfield's record, as we will proceed to show. In the thirty-ninth Congress, first session, Gen. Garfield said this: "Now, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman who reports this bill will put in a section, that all who participate in the rebellion shall forever be excluded from the right of elective franchise, in all cases relating to national offices, then I will say the proposition will be just and one we could stand upon as a matter of principle. Anything is just which exacts no greater penalty and punishes no more than those who have actually participated in rebellion. The proposition, without any modification, without any limitation, would meet with my approval, as one eminently wise and just, if it could be practically carried out."

See Congressional Globe, part 3, page 2,458. These were the sentiments of the gentleman and just (?) Garfield after "the cruel war" had been over for some time. If such sentiments and feelings indicate "friendship for us" what would the mild Garfield have said if he had been bent on vengeance? If the above be a fair specimen of Garfield's friendship then we say reverently, Good Lord, deliver us from such friendship for all time. The bear hugs his friend but he hugs the life out of him. We would rather have a bold, brave man's vengeance than the gentle Garfield's friendship. "And thus I clothe my naked villainy With old odds words, and a forked billow, And seem a saint, when most 'Tis play the devil."

We have noticed the points made by the Biblical Recorder because it is the origin of the largest Christian domination in the State, has a wide influence and a large circulation. Unchallenged its statements would work evil, although we acquit it willingly of all such intention. In an attempt to be non-political and fair to all it unwittingly was betrayed into some inaccuracies. One word more. We respectfully submit that the records of the country do not justify any one in classifying Hancock and Garfield together as military heroes, Hancock ranks with the best corps commanders of the war. But few men knew Garfield as well as he in the war at all.

Concord, N. H. New York. (Cotton, July 10.) Until yesterday the New York market for contracts was very dull, and the general tendency in prices was downward. On Thursday there were rumors of a contemplated acquisition of the Iron Company, and for the first time these rumors assumed more definite shape, and frightened away the shorts into a covering, causing an advance of nearly 20 points on the price of the day before. About half past two there was considerable excitement, from Black's open letter to Garfield in review of the latter's speech. It was written September, 1876. The tone of which you so now regarded in the address upon the political treaty, the general acceptance of your own party, and the popular liberty. Unweariedly you have proved that never usurped all ways by dishonestly using. Being that the Abolitionists were led by men whom no oath could hold to the Constitution, and whom no pledge could bind to an observance of its principles, it had no right to expect a decent regard for justice in their administration of the national matters. I do not mean that the masses of your party were or are now, destitute of common integrity. But that was overruled by the political doctrines of their leaders. Having once set aside the sacred trust of the laws, they had no standard by which they could measure the moral conduct of themselves or others, and they become incapable of seeing the difference between right and wrong in the administration of public affairs. The result was that they have not only abdicated the Constitution, but have also nullified the rights of the citizenry. You have consistently made out of the corrupt government on this side of Coast into a general assembly, but I am ready to admit that the truth of it against the wrongs of the world, and the history of a hundred years, and produce the worst act you can find of fraudulent spoliation upon its people, and I believe that you have committed here under the auspices of the party now in power will give up the base.

You have consistently made out of the corrupt government on this side of Coast into a general assembly, but I am ready to admit that the truth of it against the wrongs of the world, and the history of a hundred years, and produce the worst act you can find of fraudulent spoliation upon its people, and I believe that you have committed here under the auspices of the party now in power will give up the base. You are speaking of the Government—the officials who rule us by their pleasure and under the shadow of their profanity, and it is no answer to quote Mr. Lott's speech before the Senate on the trial of Belknap. His eulogy was on the virtue and intelligence of the people, and he argued that the Government servants in the hands of the people. He argued that we have to whitewash the Administration, if he had meant to do so he could not have succeeded; for there was not wash enough in his basket to go over the twenty-thousand part of the job.

The Recorder is pleased to intimate that there is but little difference, if any, in the matter of personal choice between Hancock and Garfield. Surely, it is not familiar with the report of the Poland Committee; with the official records concerning the DeGolyer payment contract; with the fact that Garfield made a speech in favor of going behind the election returns in the cases of Louisiana and Florida, and then when he became a member of the Electoral Commission he was one of the 8 who said that the election returns must not be examined into, but must stand. But let the Recorder speak for itself. It says: "There is during the present contest, especially no just ground for any personal preference. Both of the candidates are distinguished Generals of the United States Army. Both bravely fought the South. Neither of them has shown anything but friendship for us since the war ended."

All the prominent Conservatives in the State who have been heard from so far are unanimous in advising all Conservatives to stick to the regular ticket. Indeed, no Conservative has been seen who advises otherwise. Richmond letter in Petersburg Index Appeal.

On last Monday morning little Jimmy Pointexter, aged two years and two months, the youngest child of Mrs. Susan Pointexter, was discovered in a coffin at the residence of his grandfather, Dr. Spicer Patrick, about one and a half miles below Charleston, West Virginia.
