VOL. XXVI.--NO. 150.

THE MAINE BLECTION.

IWILMINGTON, N. C., TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1880.

WHOLE NO. 4,082

Our latest telegrams from Maine point almost unmistakably to the defeat of the Republicans. Even the "plumed knight," while he thinks

"there is still hope for Davis," says "it is a great defeat nevertheless." We confess a joyful surprise at the result in Maine, and now feel that the election of Hancock is almost absolutely certain.

Maine voted yesterday. We expect no good for our side from that quarter. The Philadelphia Times has a staff correspondent in that State, Mr. Moses P. Handy, formerly of the Richmond Enquirer. He thinks the Republican success probable, in his letter of the 10th. He thus refers to our townsman, Col. Waddell:

"Of the ex-Confederates who have taken part in the Democratic canvass in Vermont and Maine under the direction of the National Democratic Committee, Col. A. M Waddell, of North Carolina, is about the only one whose labors seem to be thoroughly acceptable. His services on the stump are in great demand here, as they were in Vermont. Col. Waddell is not a great orator, but he is a man of fine common sense and extensive acquaintance with public affairs, and his mental habit is conservative. The secret of his acceptance to these people is a careful avoidance of topics upon which his hearers do not care for the advice or comments of "Confederate brigadiers," and the confinement of his remarks to an earnest appeal to those against whom he bore arms to accept the South's assurances of oyalty to the Union and to pay no heed to the partisan cry that she is planning a new rebellion. He talks in a way that compels belief in his candor, and the warmth of his argument cannot be mistaken for the heat of passion. He spoke to-day at York Beach, Long Sands, where there was a tremendous gathering of Democrats and Greenbackers, attracted by flaming posters announcing 'a grand union mass meeting, picnic and clam chowder.' When Waddell got through many Union the hand. One old man said to him: 'General' (they always promote the ex-Rebs when they come North) 'General, you did my heart good. I never heard a better Union lecture. I should like to hear you preach a regular sermon.' Up here the country people always speak of a political speech as a 'lecture.' "

Ohio and Indiana vote on the same day - 12th of October. If the Democrats carry either or both, Hancock's race will be easy and victory will be assured. If the Radicals should carry both, it will give the Democrats all they can do to win in November. The loss of both in October gives no guarantee, however, of the loss of either in November. Cheating and ballot-stuffing might defeat us in the State elections, show a very different result. We are not expecting a defeat in Indiana, and our chances are fair in Ohio, but elections are uncertain, and it is well enough to look at the worst some-

- Two burglars entered the room of Miss Roberts, a sister of Mrs. Charles Price, of Salisbury, and robbed her. The Democrat says that the next morning Mrs. P. entered her sister's room and found her in what she supposed to be in a dying condition. She was utterly unconscious and purple and black about the throat and lower part of her face. There were finger prints on her throat and arms. After much exertion she finally succeeded in arousing her sister, who exclaimed, "Oh, sister, the men have been here." She said she had been awakened in the midst of a sound slumber, and saw a man standing over her with a pistol in his right hand and a dark lantern in the other. The glare of the lantern, she supposes, awoke her. She threw up both hands, drawing the sheet over her face, and was about to scream when another man who had been standing with his back to the door of her room, just on the right, grasped her right arm with his left hand, and put his right hand to her throat just in time to stifle her screams and prevent an alarm. The man who had been standing over her dropped his pistol and put a wet handkerchief or cloth to her nose and mouth. She says she felt a taste in her mouth like hartshorn. The man standing over her was rather handsome and dressed in black, with a white cravat, and a light mustache, with rather large blue eyes. She heard him say to his confederate, "it's the same girl," and a moment later, when she was ineffectually struggling to make an outcry, he said in a kind tone of voice : "Don't hurt the child." She recognized the man as one she traveled with on the cars between Mobile and Atlanta on her way to this town, and she could see

Under this head the London Universe, alluding to the presentation of colors to the Welsh Fusiliers by His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales, on the eve of their departure for India, thus refers to the history of Col. Luke O'Connor, a brother of Mr. Daniel O'Connor, of this city, in connection

The colors with which the regiment parted have a glorious history. They were presented to the regiment in 1849 by the late Prince Consort at Winchester, and the first campaign in which they were borne was that of the Crimea at the battle of the drunk and disorderly, who was let off on Alma. They were in the first attempt to storm the heights carried by Lieutenant Anstruther and Lieutenant Butler. The latter, while crossing the river, was shot dead. Lieutenant Anstruther, closely followed by Sergeant O'Connor (an Irishman). made his way up the heights, but the Sergeant, on looking back, discovered that the regiment was not following, and he intimated to the Lieutenant that it was impossible for them to advance. Within a few seconds both were shot, the Sergeant in the right breast, Anstruther through the hearts O'Connor seized the Queen's color, and though bleeding profusely from his wound, he succeeded in crawling up the redoubt. With his right arm he held aloft the Queen's color, a feat which had the effect of rallying the regiment, which by this time was getting dispirited. The Twenty-third dashed up the heights, and succeeded in capturing the redoubt. For this valorous deed O'Connor received the Victoria Cross (he was, indeed, one of the first recipients of that honor) and a commission, and he has since attained the rank of Colonel. A DOWN TOWN MERCHANT, having passed several sleepless nights, disturbed by the agonies and cries of a suffering child, and becoming convinced that Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup was just the article needed, procured a supply for the child. On reaching home and acquainting his wife with what he had done, she rofused to have it administered to the child, as she was strongly in favor of Homeopathy. That night the child passed in suffering, and the parents without sleep. Returning home the day following, the father found the baby still werse, and while contemplating another sleepless night, the mother steepped from the roem to attend to some demestic duties, and left the father with the child. During her absence he administered a portion of the Soothing Syrup to the baby, and sald nothing. That night all hands slept well, and the little fellow awoke in the morning bright and happy. The mother was delighted with the sudden and wonderful change, and although at first offended with the deception practiced upon her, has continued to use the Syrup, and suffering crying babies and restless nights have disappeared. A single trial of the Syrup never yet failed to relieve the baby, and overcome the prejudices of the mother. Sold by all Druggists. 25 cents a bottle.
