Captain John N. Maffitt, of this county, has an interesting paper in the United Service Review (Military and Naval) for October on "Remia scences of the Confederate Navy."

The Philadelphia Press swears that the Democrats bought up 3,000 votes in Maine. Well, if they did, that is not half as many as the Rads purchased. The Radical pot need not be calling the Democratic kettle black.

On October 1, the work of taking the census of the Indians of the United States will begin. Some of them are like darkey repeaters in election times; they move about rapidly and if not careful will be taken twice.

l'hiladelphia's exact registration is given at 210,346, and not 220,000, as we saw first stated, and as given on our second page. This, mind you, is what the Radical supervisors return. The census only shows 169,-500 qualified voters, which is fully as much as it can have.

The Radicals are on the highest free on the highest political mountain, and as the Maine flood reaches their nose they splutter out, "It is not much of a shower after all.' Vide such re-lia-ble sheets as the Chicago Inter-Ocean, New York Tribune and Philadelphia Press.

The Radicals in Maine are engaged at their old tricks of holding back returns to manipulate them. If all the returns had been sent in the night after the election Plaisted's majority would have been probably 2,000. They are a cunning and rascally set, and if you can get ahead of them you must rise early and work late and do "a sight of cheating,"

INDIANA.

The Louisville Courier-Journal's Indianapolis correspondent writes on the 13th inst. that both parties in Indiana are "splendidly organized," and the Republicans are far better organized than ever before and are confident of success. The Democrats are very hopeful also. He

"It would be folly to attempt to conceal the fact that the Republican party in Indiana is in a well-organized and confident condition. It is better organized than it ever was before. The party leaders first set out to instill confidence in the masses of the party. By a complete system of drilling they succeeded in their efforts. Then the entire machinery and fremendons resources of the party were used in estab lishing a thorough organization, and in this, too, have they been successful. The Democratic party of Indiana now confronts a great political organization, a gigantic political machine, engineered by a class of desperate political adventurers and unscrupulous party managers. The party is commanded by men who will stoop to commit any dirty piece of rascality to succeed They will import negro and white voters, stuff ballot-boxes, arrest and imprison Democrats on the eve of the election, and, in fact, do any villainy to accomplish their

He says they are playing a strong bluff game, and are preparing to overawe Democratic voters.

"There is talk here that Bill Dudley, the United States Marshal for Indiana and vice or head Chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, intends to arrest a number of Democrats in every county in Indiana the day before the election and slap them in jail."

The greatest activity possible prevails. Speakers, and many of them, of ability, are canvassing in every direction. "The woods are full of them." He writes:

"There is no foolishness about the Indiana Democrats in this campaign. They know the kind of men they have got to deal with and the hard, carnest, rattling and they will do it. It is true that they have got no money, that they are poor and need money, but they propose to make up for that deficiency by activity and vigi-lance. The game of the Republicans is to buy Indiana, if such a thing is possible. They have had their agents in every county in Indiana, for weeks, bidding for Democrats to declare for their ticket. But the Republicans have plenty of money. The 100,000 office-holders have been assessed and the Treasury is in an encouraging condition It was only last week that the Republican committee here ordered 2,500 suits of fine woolen goods for the Indianapolis boys, the whites and blacks, which will cost he nest, round sum of $5,000."

It is well known in Washington that there is entire harmony between the Republican and Greenback managers. They are working together and Weaver is only an unsorupulous and very weak tool the Radicals are using to entice Democrats of the soft kind from their allegiance. The Greenback party as now run is the old corrupt, desperate party. Only that and nothing more.

The New York dry goods market is thus glanced at in a letter of the

The Republican County Convention: | Col. D. K. McRac's speech. The Convention was called to order about 10.80 A. M., yesterday, in the Court House, by Gen. S. H. Manning, Chairman of the Executive Committee, who was subsequently made permanent Chairman, with Jos. E. Sampson as Secretary. After considerable wrangling in regard to the admissibility of certain delegates and other minor matters the Convention finally entered upon the business for which it had assembled. It was thought that the party in this city had gotten rid of a good deal of its inharmonious elements, and that this Convention would be characterized at least by good order and decorum, and whatever differences of opinion might exist, the disputes would be settled in a peaceful and orderly manner. But so far from this being the case, the proceedings were if anything more devoid of dignity and harmony than those of any similar body that has assembled in this city for years. This was particularly the case when the nominations for the House of Represensatives were being made. The two candidates first brought before the Convention by their respective friends were W. H. Waddell, colored, member of the last House, and J. C. Hill, formerly a member from this county There were thirty delegates entitled to vote. When the first ballot was announced it was found that Waddell had received 16 and Hill 15 votes, making a total of 31, or one vote more than the number of legal delegates in the Convention. This caused some disturbance, but the Chairman quieted the crowd by suggesting a new ballot. This was acceded to, and the next ballot resulted in Hill's receiving 15 votes and Waddell 14. This vote was about to be announced by the Chairman, when the opponents of Hill burst out in a storm of furious protest and indignation, shouting "Won't have him," "Don't want him, "We'll vote for a Democrat first," &c. This scene of unparalleled confusion lasted for about a half an hour, some of the delegates as well as outsiders being perfectly furious, one indignant sovereign declaring that "New Hanover county was going to h-ll." the meantime Gen. Manning, the Chairman, rapped continuously on the desk before him, and his stentorian voice could be heard above the tumult of the excited assemblage, shouting "Order! Order! Order!" Finally Waddell got up and endeavored to pour oil upon the troubled waters, and then Hill jumped up and proposed that Waddell be placeed as second on the ticket by acclamation. This proposal served but as a signal for a fresh outburst of indignant negatives and protests, until finally the nominee had to withdraw his name. This was put to the meet-

Another ballot was then taken, which resulted in the nomination of Waddell. The remainder of the nominations were made without much difficulty, and the ticket, as completed, is as follows: For the House-W. H. Waddell, colored,

A resolution was adopted recommending H. E. Scott to Pender County as the choice of New Hanover Republicans for Senator.

Rice Fields and Blee Birds. R. K. Bryan, Esq., of the Fayetteville Examiner, who was recently here on route to his old home at Scott's Hill, thus alludes to a familiar sound in these parts: "The perpetual booming of guns suggested that another war had been started. We found, however, an explanation of the phenomenon on our return. The rice fields were in all the glory of the rich golden harvest, and the booming guns were fired among the rice birds, which come in multitudes at this season to spatch from man the fruits of his industry. The rice fields put us in mind of the ante-bellum times, when the planters were prosperous and wealthy. May those times return." The rice birds are a favorite dish with our epicures, and our people have their spite out of them for being such enemies to the unoffending rice planters by eating 'em. It is about time for them to take their departure now. Resignation of Dr. Patterson.

Many will regret to learn that Rev. Dr. George Patterson, of St. John's Episcopal Church, in this city, has resigned the rectorship of that church. He does so, we learn, with the intention of accepting a position tendered him by the University of the South, which is to solicit an endowment fund for that institution at Sewanee Tennessee. It will be some consolation to his many friends to know that his acceptance of this position will not necessarily deprive Dr. Patterson of a continued resi-

Col. McRae, who addressed the people of Wilmington last night, at the stand erected on Third. street, was escorted by the "Young Men's Hancock, Jarvis and Shackelford Club," with their music, transparencies and lamps. The distinguished gentleman was introduced by Col. Roger Moore in felicitous terms, in which he paid a handsome and warm tribute to the mer. its of the orator, referring to his eminence at the bar, to his distinction on the battle field and to his uncommonigifts In the lecture hall. Col. McRae spoke for over two hours. He was strong in argument, thoroughly fortified as to facts, was witty, eloquent and anecdotical by turns. Although there were no seats for the audience they stood for over two hours giving, profound attention to the cogent and carnest logic, bristling with points and facts, with which the able gentleman entertained them. We have heard Col. McRae in a happier mood. when he thrilled his audience with a more perfect magnetism and when he led them more completely captive at his will; but we never heard him when he appeared more seriously impressed with the importance of the matter to be presented, and when he elaborated his points with greater care and force. It was a speech to instruct, for, unlike most public speakers, he elaborated every point, and left nothing to be filled up by the information of his hearers. It showed throughout the utmost care as to accuracy of statement, and justified what was said in the STAR recently, that he was thoroughly informed as to the issues before the country. No man who listened attentively could fail to understand every point he made and the argument by which he sustained it.

In the opening of his speech he referred to a matter personal to himself. He said there had gone out an impression, how extended he knew not, which affected him personally, and that he desired what he then said should appear in the papers of the city. He said he entered the Democratic party in 1840 before he was twenty-one years of age-that whether in Europe or America, in Tennessee or North Carolinawherever he was he had been true to the principles of that party, had been everywhere a Democrat; that he had never given a vote, national or otherwise, except for the Democratic party. That he made an open challenge, and he invited all concerned to make the necessary investigation and seek to prove the contrary. He then addressed himself to the great questions before the country. The Democratic party is seeking to restore a free government-a government of law. Can it be done? We ought to be able to do it. ing in the form of a motion, and the "eyes In 1876, 4,500,000 votes were cast. It had elected its candidate for the Presidency, but had not been allowed to inaugurate him; that the Democrats had been deprived of their rights by the instrumentalities of fraud. They had once submitted, but it would never be done again that this country could not be any more destroyed by fraud than it could be destroyed by force. The amendments to the Constitution were inviolable, and the Democrats were resolved to maintain the Constitution, not as it was, but as it is He then showed how the Republican leaders sought to poison the Northern mind and to malign the South by simple and unadulterated misrepresentation. He first quoted from a speech of the late Oliver P Morton, delivered in the Senate and circulated in the North. It was carefully pre pared. Morton had gone to his place; the Lord had given and the Lord had taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord Morton said that not a constable could be elected in the South un less he had been a Confederate. Col. McRae read from his speech, in which he said that no Democrat had been sent to Congress from the South who had been a Union man. Col. McRae showed that within five feet of him, as Morton spoke the libel, there sat Andrew Johnson, elected by the Democrats of Tennessee over Gen. Wm. Bates, a gallant Confederatethat Johnson had been a Brigadier General in the Union army, had been Provisiona Governor of Tennessee, had been Vice President on the Lincoln ticket, and had succeeded him as President. He referred to Gen. Gilbert C. Walker, who had been elected Governor of Virginia and twice sent to Congress by the Democrats of Virginia, and he had been a General in the Federal army. He referred to John Haucock, Leftwitch, Cooper and others who had been Union men and who had been sent to Congress by the Democrats. As i was 1876, so it was now in 1880. The same old slanders and misrepresentation were resorted to. He quoted from Gen. Banks's recent speech against the South-Banks, Stonewall Jackson's commissary, who kept correct accounts, if they were running accounts. In contrast with Banks's misrepresentations and slanders he gave Grant's testimony concerning the Bouth during his recent trip, and which was so favorable. He then took up John Sherman and thoroughly exposed him as a man and riddled his late speech in Washington. Sherman said there was no Republican in the rebel army, and that there was no Democrat who did not go into the Confederate army. Col. McRae showed how many soldiers Missouri and other Southern States had furnished to the Union army, and that these men were led into battle by men who had voted for Breckinridge in 1860. The South sent a half million of soldiers to swell the Union forces and Sherman knew this when he made his false statements. He was witty and sharp just here, and created much laughter. He said these libeis will continue, and it is only left the South to confront them with the same sturdy manliness which has always characterized it. He showed how the South had borne itself for peace' and fraternity since 1865; referred to the Philadelphia Conference, to its course in the New York Convention, when it accepted Seymour and Blair, nommated by the North; showed how, in a spirit of peace and brotherly love, it accepted Greeley, its worst enemy, and gave him a hearty, earnest support. Said he, the South has never failed once to meet all the requirements ever made upon her. She has carried out in good fuith the reconstruction laws, oppressive as they were, and although she had many tens of thousands of soldiers paroled, there has never been one violation of the parole. She stands libeled by the leaders of the Republican party, and on all occasions. This is the only mode of warfare of which the Republican party is able to avail itself. assert, he said, that the Republican party is the party of crime, and crime in all its aspects. He proved this most conclusively, but we have not the space to follow him in his lucid, forceful argument. He left no thing unproved. He made no statement that was not sustained by fact and evidence. He took up the life and character of Garfield and discected it most thoroughly. He laid his corruptions have to the central bone. He examined the Credit Mobilier scandal in an exhaustive manner that no one has approached in this campaign. We took some notes, but the argument was too full, too minute, too elaborate to allow even a hurried summary.

transaction. The back salary grab was referred to also. He dwelt particularly upon Garfield's chief crime-the spoliation of the States. The Louisiana outrage was presented in words of burning elequence. He said Garfield was the most active participant of all the members of Congress in referred to General Hancock, and gave a most interesting, graphic and cloquent description of the manner of his election at Cincinnati. He referred in scathing terms to the assault made upon him by Garfield when he attempted to drive him from the army. In all he said of Hancock he was both happy and impassioned, and he paid a beautiful and touching tribute to his high patriotism and statesmanship. He also addressed the Greenbackers and showed up that consummate cheat, Weaver, in true colors. But we cannot follow him, although he made some strong and important points. He quoted from an arraignment of the Republican party made by Weaver and proved him a paid hireling of that party in his present canvass. He paid his respects to Kornegay, the so-called Greenback candidate for Congress, and showed how in voting for him you really voted for Canaday. The speech was full of matter, but the strength of the speaker failed bim before he had completed the line of his argument he purposed pursuing. It was a speech to hear closely and then to think about.

He also discussed, with exceeding care and thoroughness, the De Golyer pavement

Death of an Old Citizen. It was a great shock to the numerous friends of Mr. William A. JOSEPH J. FRAZIER. JOHN F. DUNN. M. A. HINES. Whiteville, N. C., Sept. 16, 1830.

Further Notice.

THE UNDERSIGNED, HAVING PURCHASED the interest of John F. Dunn in the above business, will continue to conduct the same under the style and firm name of Frazier & Hines. We extend our sincere thanks to those who have here-tofore liberally patronized us, and hope a continu-ance from them and the public generally. Having purchased a large and extensive stock of Dry Goods, Notions, and other goods generally kept in a country store, we feel confident that we are in a situation to offer to the trade bargains equal to any house in our town. Hespectfully, JOSEPH J. FRAZIER, Whiteville, N. C., Sept. 16, 1890. sc18 oaw 4t
