remains "solid" in its opposition to Radical rule and ruin. If it should disintegrate and begin to seek new alliances the treatment may be different. If the Southern people should abandon all convictions of principle and look merely to a line of policy that will bring them protection and equal government and freedom from slander and oppression at the hands of the "powers that be," the course to be pursued by the Radical legislators will be different possibly.

But we are not speculating as to what the South may or may not do. We only mean to speculate as to what the Radicals may do if they should have the entire Government, President, Congress and the Courts, in their possession. We do not look for any specially hostile legislation for some time, as we have said. We shall probably fare well enough, as far as repressive and unjust legislation is concerned, for some time. The bitter feelings of the North will not reassert themselves for some year or two. Self-interest is sure to prompt them for a season. But when Grant or some other Stalwart is to be nominated or voted for then the outrage-mills will begin and the tongue of slander will wag and wax furious, and lies and bitterness will drop from it as in 1880.

In the meantime it will be wise in North Carolinians for the next few years to give more attention to home matters than to general politics. Our people have much at stake, and they cannot be too careful and constant in their attention to State affairs. We hope our Legislature will prove a wise, beneficent body, that all may rise up and call it blessed.

THE VOICE OF THE SECOND AMENDMENT.

A serious error occurred in the reported vote in yesterday's STAR as to the second amendment—that which concerns the insane. We rejoice to be able to state that but 153 votes were cast in its favor in New Hanover. The principle of the amendment is wrong, and the danger that lurks under it certain. Whether the people generally have voted for it or not we are not able to say. We are certain that it would have found but few friends among reflecting people if they had been apprised as to the true merits of the case. The amendment was neither discussed in the papers nor on the stump. The STAR was the solitary daily that opposed it, and those three well edited weeklies, the Pittsboro Record, the Wilson Advance, and the Kinston Journal—all edited by lawyers—were the only ones that enforced objections to its adoption.

The first paper to point out its dangers was the Record. It was not a Democratic measure, but it was a very injudicious one. A man is worth $100,000 of real estate. He pays taxes on it until he reaches his fiftieth year. He has paid every year to help take care of the indigent insane. He is at fifty smitten with the fearful curse and is sent to the asylum. His property is still taxed to aid in maintaining the poor insane, whilst he is forced to pay for the care of himself besides. Is there any justice or fairness in such a law as that? Surely the men who sustain the asylums by taxes ought to have at least an equal share in their blessings. We think the mere statement of the matter will at once meet the approval of every just man who considers. If it has been adopted it is because the merits of the amendment were not discussed.

The Agnostics believe nothing because they know nothing. Their name is significant. A writer in the North Carolina Presbyterian says: "It is derived from a Latin verb to know combined with a privative preposition, and thus expressed, the cardinal idea is ignorance. Its use is in connection with those who claim that we are entirely ignorant as to the existence of God and necessarily too as to what concerns duty to Him and all kindred subjects."

They are the modern "Know Nothings." They do not believe in God but in humanity. They worship man. It is a principle of human nature to worship something. A man never rises above the object or thing worshipped. If he worship man, he will keep on man's level. That is the whole of it.

We have received a pamphlet published at Milwaukee, Wis., which is but another indication of the drift of opinion in the North. It is an attack upon the office of President and favors the abolishing of the office as essentially unrepresentative and anti-democratic. We have not read it through. It is a sign. It says the "one man power" will overthrow the Republic. It says it is now menacing the very life of the Republic. It says corruption will destroy our institutions.

It is the voice of Northern Radicals sounding an alarm signal. We quote. Speaking of the Presidency it says: "It has been, and will remain, a principal and ever-flowing source of political corruption. Its abolition is the only means of arresting the wide stream of corruption that inundates the party system, and of reforming the character of the latter."

South Carolina has gone Democratic by a matter of some 40,000 majority. In this State we will try to be satisfied with 10,000 if we have got that.

with possibly a single exception, could not wait until the result of the Presidential election was officially determined before casting upon Garfield to throw some of the risk he is supposed to have assumed, for campaign purposes and to come out boldly for revenue reform. The Evening Post was safe to say that the Republican candidates for President "have a much clearer and more consistent position in respect to this question. This is the old-fashioned platform of the free traders. If this assurance had been voted sooner it might have stopped the flow of money from manufaturing establishments into the Republican fund to be used for campaign purposes, and perhaps have cost Garfield the votes of Pennsylvania and Connecticut. But there is now no necessity for confinement. The Post will be followed in course of time and at distant intervals by the Chicago Tribune, the New York Times and the Cincinnati Commercial, and their demand will have weight, for they have borne the heat and burden of the journalistic fight for Garfield's election. When the fight waxed warm, if not before, the solid men of business whose money and whose influence turned the tide of battle will realize once more that when business plays into the hands of the politicians it is not the politicians who get the worst of the game."

North Carolina Medical Journal for October is replete with excellent matter adapted specially to the needs of the practitioners. It is a well edited and useful publication. We may refer to one or two of its editorials hereafter. The communication from Dr. L. S. Staton, of Tarboro, will arrest the attention of medical men throughout the world, as it did a previous operation of his. The one recorded is most extraordinary, and there are but two other records like it. It is a case of "Gastronomy." A negro boy eight years of age is fed entirely through a tube inserted in the stomach. He had drunk large quantities of concentrated lye, and thus destroyed his power to swallow any drink or food, the oesophagus being closed forever. He was dying of hunger when Dr. Staton made the experiment in June last. The boy feeds himself by chewing food and spitting it in a tube that enters his stomach through an orifice made through his skin. The report is accompanied with two cuts showing the negro as he was before the operation and as he is now. Price of the Journal $3 a year. Drs. DeLoates and Wood editors, Wilmington, N. C.

Mr. Conkling seldom resorts to an historical allusion or parallel without getting things wrong, history, whether ancient, modern, recent, or contemporary, not being in his line. Thus, in his recent comparison of the treatment of the South by the victorious Germans, he says that Germany took from France "a heavy tribute, besides the rich provinces of Alsace and Lorraine;" but when "we conquered the South not one farthing of tribute was raised," etc. Now, this does not look as if Mr. Conkling's estimable father had taught him to reason in his childhood with the care reported by Gen. Grant. When we conquered the South we inflicted an enormous pecuniary penalty, probably much surpassing the German indemnity, consisting of the enforced repudiation of the Confederate debt and the State debts incurred in aid of the rebellion; and the destruction of the Confederate currency, which had some value, though not much, and, finally, of the enforced participation in the burden of the United States debt incurred in making the conquest.—The Nation, Rep.

Whatever the exact way in which it came about, it is a hard fact that the government of the United States, for the next four years, will be Republican in speech, purpose and action. The Republican President will apparently have at his back a Republican Congress. What they will, they can do with the Southern States and their people. We hope and believe, however, that the business interests which were the mainspring of Tuesday's work will be opposed utterly to any legislation that would, in any way, embarrass the agriculture and manufactures, the trade and commerce of the South. It is to the interest of the North and West to take this position. They will do it whenever, and as soon as, the people of the Southern States cease to be posed by the politicians as the would-be autocrats of the Union that they did their utmost to destroy. When this spectre of Southern supremacy is laid, the Northern people will be freer to exhibit their kindly and interested feelings. And one of the first questions that the Southern whites will have to ask themselves is, whether the welfare of the South has been, and is likely to be, hindered or advanced by the alliance with the Democrats of the North? It does not hurt those gentry to be beaten. They are sure to have just as equal governments in their States in any event. Not so with the South. In losing politically the South loses in pocket and in peace of mind. Will the South remain on the losing side, and, if so, on what terms and for what purpose? The Southern people, we fancy, will make themselves heard on this subject before the winter is past.—Charleston News and Courier, Dem.

John Dickenson, aged thirty-five years, residing at 254 Madras street, Brooklyn, and doing business at 229 Broadway, New York, has lost his life through the inhalation of the vapor from the toy known as "serpent's eggs," of which he was the maker. These eggs, while burning and producing the serpent, have for a long time been considered by physicians as dangerous to use in a close room on account of the noxious vapor arising therefrom. The report Friday cracked while Mr. Dickenson was bending over it, and he inhaled the poisonous fumes. When he noticed this he drove his wife and children quickly out of the basement, at the same time remarking that it was all over with him. A short time after he was seized with a choking cough, and in one of the spasms he died.

DEATH OF AN OLD TRIBUNE EDITOR.—SPRAGUE DIVORCE SUIT—LEGAL REPUBLICAN VOTES. (By Telegram to the Morning Star.) NEW YORK, November 5.—The Tribune announces the death of Jackson Van Buren, on November 3, of its former well known contributor, Solon Robinson. The Sun says Winchester Britton, ex-District Attorney of Kings county, has been retained to bring action for divorce for Miss Kate Chase Sprague against ex-Gov. Sprague, of Rhode Island. He will have the papers ready for service in a few days. Mr. Britton, on his visit to Providence last week, framed a resolution for a piano and a portion of Mrs. Sprague's wardrobe, and placed them in the hands of the sheriff to seize. He has since learned that they have been served. The Tammany Committee on Organization held a protracted session last evening. John Kelly offered a resolution setting forth that a large number of persons from Washington, Vermont, Massachusetts and other States had been colonized here and voted the Republican State, county and local tickets. The names and residences of many of these illegal voters were known. The resolution provided that the matter be placed in the hands of counsel to take appropriate action.

MANCHESTER COTTON MARKET. NO FURTHER GIVING WAY IN PRICES.—VIEWS OF PRODUCERS. (By Cable to the Morning Star.) LONDON, November 5.—The Manchester Guardian says: Our market is flat and transactions few and small. Eggs are, however, no further giving way in prices. The names and residences of many of these illegal voters were known. The resolution provided that the matter be placed in the hands of counsel to take appropriate action.
