levy contribution a thousand times greater than the sum asked by the Chief of Ordnance for the manufacture of heavy cannon. When war should break out there would be no time to improvise defences. War might break out any time. Cuban cruisers were firing on American ships every two or three months. He hoped the incoming administration would listen to no apologies but adopt a policy which would teach all nations, and especially Spain, that the American flag must be everywhere respected.

Mr. Regan, of Texas, favored the strengthening of fortifications, and dwelt on the necessity of providing suitable defences for Galveston harbor.

Mr. King also alluded to the importance of strengthening the defences of Southern ports, which might now be entered and destroyed by Spanish men-of-war. General debate then closed, and the bill was read for amendments.

Mr. Johnston, of Virginia, under direction of the Military Committee, offered an amendment making the first section appropriste $500,000 instead of $100,000 for strengthening sea coast defences.

Mr. Randall, of Pennsylvania, spoke at length in opposition to the amendment. He was opposed to any increase of appropriations under the fancied apprehension of war. There was no danger of war and the country might better rely on diplomacy.

Mr. Johnston, of Virginia, supported the amendment. He thought that the country should prepare for war in time of peace. The spectacle now presented by the harbor defences of the country was disgraceful.

Mr. Blount, of Georgis, argued against all accendments and agreed with Mr. Randall that there was no danger of war. Foreign powers had all they could attend to at home.

Finally discussion closed and the amend ment was rejected by a vote of 90 to 56. Other amendments were offered, but all were either rejected or ruled out. The committee then rose and reported the bill to the House, when it was passed.

Mr. Gibson, of Louisiana, from the committee on Mississippi Levees, reported a bill appropriating $1,800,000 for improvement of the Mississippi river, which was ordered printed and recommitted. The House then adjourned.
