WILMINGTON, N. C.:

TUESDAY MORNING, Jan. 4, 1881.

REPUBLICAN PANACEA.

There is a paper in the January number of the Atlantic Monthly on the subject of dealing with the South that is almost amusing in its effrontery, although the writer evidently does not intend to be offensive or unkind. He is simply one of that class of politicians whose "foresight" is not as good as their "hindsight," and who never understood the South and will never understand it. The writer wishes an end to all strife and proscription, but he thinks the South is the sole sinner. He does not favor a forcing process by harsh laws as it was a great failure "to attempt to reform the South by act of Congress." Just so, and so it will ever be. Gag laws and force laws cannot make friends or overturn the laws of nature. The plan of the Atlantic writer to buy up or conciliate or win over the South to Republicanism is to distribute the offices. He disclaims all purpose of bribery, but he thinks offices ought to be given to all men of high character who will come over and "help build up a new Republican party" in the South. We apprehend the new material will not be much better than the old, and will fail as completely to secure the favor or confidence of the white people as those men failed who deserted the Southern people in the days of carpet-baggery.

The failure of all proposed plans is guaranteed from the start, because the doctors do not understand the true condition of the patient. It is painful to see the ignorance and blindness of those who attempt to cure. If they comprehended the actual state of affairs—if they could put themselves precisely in the place of the Southern people they would be able to suggest a plan and it would be very different from any that has been proposed. The Southern people have cause to distrust the kindness of the North, and especially of the Republican party. The Reconstruction Laws adopted by them were not only oppressive but under some aspects horrible. The South has good cause to regard the Republican party as its implacable, treacherous enemy, and the leaders of that party never do anything to allay fears or court confidence. A few men in the South—a dozen or so in each State—may be won over by a fat office but they will lose their influence with the whites that moment they sell out and identify themselves with their enemies. This is very natural, and it is just what the Radicals would do under the same circumstances.

The South sees the Republican party standing up as the advocate of strong government—as gravitating constantly and unerringly to a system that was not tolerated in the beginning and only becomes more dangerous with time. They claim that the form of government set up by the framers has been changed completely by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, and the decisions of a Radical Supreme Court give countenance and support to such a pretension.

When the Northern people understand that there is a far greater question than mere party at the bottom of the Southern question they will have learned much and have taken a sure step in the right direction. That question is not partisan but enters into the very framework of society. As Gen. Bradley T. Johnson says in his statesmanlike, admirable, and able letter written August 28, 1880, to the Dubuque Herald, it is a question with the South of "social order, civilization, property, education and progress." It is certain, therefore, that the South will not agree to any plans of concession or surrender that in any way shall demand the imperilling or giving up of any of these vital interests. The whites in the South must control, and they will control, and for the very reasons assigned by Gen. Johnson. We quote again from his capital letter:

"I said the forces that control a State are virtue, intelligence, property and manhood, and that no device could be invented, no constitutional amendment nor Congressional enactment be applied, which could change this order of nature. When society is left to itself, unconfrolled by exterior force, these vital forces will direct and govern it. Therefore I said the negro could not control any portion of the Southern States. The whites would govern these States always and under all circumstances, not because they are white, but because they possess those attributes which the other race is deficient in. * * * But I said under all circumstances we will retain the control of society in the hands of the whites, because all the forces of society inhere in, and pertain to, the whites."

That is the truth, every word of it. There is more truth—more real political philosophy in these few lines from the pen of a Southern man, than in whole volumes of "Congressional Records" filled up with the partizanship, rant and bitterness of Radical members. It is certain that there are "inherent, irresistible forces which control society, above constitutions, laws or political arrangements. The history of every civilization will prove this.

The negroes were used to oppress and plunder the South. The object of the Radical leaders is to use still the negroes, not to benefit the South and help develop and enrich, but to aid them in keeping eternal control of the power, patronage and pelf of the Government. The South will never surrender, sell out, or prostitute itself before any party with such a record, whose gospel is hate, whose desire is revenge, whose purposes are destructive, whose wish is to degrade the whites to the level of the negro.

Col. McClure, the able and fair-minded editor of the Philadelphia Times, in one of his letters from the South, does not fail to understand what was our condition in the past. He says, and with the utmost truth, that there is no Republican party in the South of any consequence "solely because unscrupulous adventurers will allow no reputable man to be a Republican," and "what should be a great party, South as well as North, is simply a band of often-wrangling official plunderers and a disgusted following of ignorant blacks." There is not an intelligent, truth-loving, conscientious man in the South, be he white or colored, Southern born or Northern, who does not know that this is true. Col. McClure is of the fixed opinion that the South will be controlled by the whites, "without regard to the occasional numerical preponderance of the blacks, simply because superior intelligence and the domination that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary cannot be reversed without chaos." This view confirms Gen. Johnson's opinion, and is in accordance with the "eternal fitness of things." There is no Northern community to-day that would agree to be governed by the blacks, or by the Chinese, whose civilization is far in advance of the negro.

We see it stated as a fact that there are really no persecutions of the Jews in Germany. The extent of what has been done was a presentation of a petition asking that the Jews be subjected to certain civil disabilities; but the Government refused to grant the petition, and there it ends. There are people in Germany, just as there are people in England and the United States, who are governed by race prejudice and who will not vote for Jews for office. The American, of Philadelphia, says pertinently:

"The Jews of America are very well contented with their position. They expressed this by the erection of a monument to Religious Liberty in Fairmount Park. And yet they lie under disabilities as great as those asked by the German petition. It is true that those disabilities are not matters of public enactment, but they are matters of public opinion. When was a Jew seen at the head of an American college, or even of a public school? How many Jews hold high offices under the government or seats in Congress? What American party would take the risk of nominating a New Yor Mayor, or Governor, or President? But in Germany, through the routine promotions of its bureaucratic system of civil service, Jews are found filling high places of a governmental or educational sort; and the petitioners ask for little more than that they be excluded from these as thoroughly as they are in America, but by a different method. On the other hand, no German innkeeper would dare to attempt their exclusion from his establishment, as has been done in several summer resorts in America. "Let us clear our own skirts in this matter, before we preach to enlighten the Germans!"

Of all people Americans can least afford to be oppressive and proscriptive. A broad tolerance should at least mark the conduct of the American citizen.

Our Raleigh namesake copies a few lines from this paper relative to actors, and says, among other things:

"When nations have grown excessively wealthy their people usually, as in the case of the Greeks and Romans, give themselves up to indolence, luxury and theatre-going, and there is a consequent demand for great actors, or, more properly speaking, great mimics—imitators of great men and women of other ages. A country in this condition has reached senility and is in a state of decline, the people being content to sit in theatres and witness the antics of clowns and harlequins and imagine they are participants in prodigies of valor and heroism, when in truth they are not possessed of nerve enough to annihilate a mosquito. When a country reaches the point that it can produce a large number of great actors, it is of little else and has about run its course. We are glad to learn that America has produced no great actors, and we trust she never may."

Without venturing upon so fruitful a theme as whether or not the theatre is a curse, we make three brief comments upon the above:

First, when the greatest Greek and Roman actors flourished those two leading nations of antiquity were at a meridian.

Second, the English, the greatest modern people, as we think, produced their most successful actors before England had attained the highest point of development and success.

Third, America has produced some great histrionic performers. The history of the drama shows that it won its highest triumphs when nations were resplendent with virility, enterprise and achievement.

"And if the editor of the Star will glance backward at the statistics he will soon discover that for forty years the statesmen of North Carolina have not provided means, nor have the white people of the State paid any large attention to education."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

We know the fact that before the war North Carolina had a better common school system than any State that went into the Southern Confederacy. The editor in Chicago is not as well informed as to North Carolina, past and present, as he thinks he is. Why education was so backward after the war for six or eight years, we have explained. The Radicals in North Carolina took steps to close practically the State University that began operations in 1795, and that had nearly 500 students from some fifteen or twenty States when the war began in 1861. A few years ago, after the Democrats had got into power, the University was revived, and has now nearly two hundred pupils. The common schools are not what the friends of education desire, but there is steady progress. The colored people are being educated by the whites, who willingly bear a self-imposed tax to that end. We think at present there are some 300,000 children at school in North Carolina. We have not the report at hand or we would give the precise figures.

Mr. Nordhoff writes to the New York Herald:

"The Southern negro is undoubtedly the most docile, and, on the whole, the best peasant laborer in the world; but the Southern white does not know how to manage him."

This is modest. The Southern people who were reared with the negroes and thoroughly understand them "do not know how to manage them." Of course the Northern man knows all about it. This reminds us of the hundreds of Northerners who pitched their tents in the South immediately after the war and renting or buying farms began to show the ignorant Southerners how very little they knew about cultivating the soil. The result can be summed up in a few words: the despised Southrons own those farms now, and the boastful Northerners have long ago "busted" and departed "to parts unknown." And now the Northern wise men are to teach the stupid Southern whites "how to manage" the race they have played with and been on terms of kindness with from childhood. All the lessons the "colored man and brother" have learned thus far from Northern apostles have not tended to make them wiser, happier or better, and this is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

— Once more Mr. Wm. E. Chandler appears upon the surface to remark that we are just about to enter upon a long season of political rest. This will be bad for Bill and Dalzell and Brother Conger, but the country will rejoice to have the prophecy verified.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Dem.

AFTER THE THEATER.

Ten dollars. Quite a sum to pay
For one who earns but four a day,
If just a single evening fun
It becomes, now matrimony's done
Three of the marriage, for you know
I never took her to a show
With that swell dress on her back,
And train strung out a yard or two—
In a plain horse car. And so nice
She looked, I do not grudge the price
Three more for seats down center aisle
And four more back—just right for style.
The curtain rose. How time will pass
While gazing through an opera glass.
The curtain fell. Once more we stood
Outside, and then the thought of food
Itself presented. She said yes,
She felt quite hungry. You can guess
That what we ate will cost a bit.
Of course, wine, to season it.
Used up that other four. Time sped.
Took her home. Good night was said.
Then to my own home came I straight;
And here, I sit and meditate.
The cash I had four hours ago
Is gone. I've naught for it to show.
Have I regrets for it? Not one.
'Twas folly, but, by Jove, 'twas fun!

CURRENT COMMENT.

— The Commissioner of Internal Revenue serves notice upon distillers that they are making too much whisky. On the first day of November, 1880, the amount of whisky on hand was 32,640,000 gallons, an increase since the 1st of July, 1879, of 13,400,000 gallons. The Commissioner thinks there is an over-production, and that the distillers are likely to incur large losses if there should happen to be a reduction of the spirit duties.—Augusta Chronicle.

— The South to-day seems to me to present the most magnificent field for industry and investment in the world. She has raised 300,000,000 pounds of cotton this year, and there can be no doubt that the annual production, so far from diminishing, will grow every year larger and larger. The great problem before her now is to convert it into the manufactured article instead of sending the raw material a thousand miles to be made into cloth. That problem she is working out and with the most profitable results. It is almost impossible to picture the prosperity of the South when that day shall come. She will be richer than ever India was. Just consider the advantages she possesses. The climate cannot be surpassed. Labor is cheaper, and, owing to her climatic superiority, it always must be cheaper in the South than in the North. Then there are her unrivalled water facilities. The streams that now run idly to the sea, are capable of running all the spindles of New England and of Old England from one end of the year to the other without a single interruption. In ten years, I firmly believe, the South will convert at her own doors one-half her cotton crop into cloth, and in a quarter of a century she will be the greatest manufacturing centre in the world in this particular line.—Col. McClure Interviewed by New York Herald.
