The city presented a beautiful appearance vesterday morning when the sun rose bright and unclouded upon the snowcapped trees and houses, and the scene to those who so seldom revel in such sights looked more like some lovely picture or grand panoramic representation than the sober, delightful reality.

There was not enough of the "beautiful snow," however, to render sleighing admissible to any extent. There were two or three sleighs on the s'reets, but no one entertained the slightest apprehension that the occupants were in any danger of being lost in a snow drift.

As soon as the sun got up a short distance the fleecy accumulations commenced melting rapidly, and from appearances at the present writing the snow of January 24th, 1881, will soon be among the things that were.

We learn that the fall of snow was quite heavy along the Wilmington & Weldon road, the Carolina Central road, and the Wilmington, Columbia & Augueta road. We hear also that it was heavy in Charleston, and at other points south of us.
