Maj. Chas. M. The fruit dish is a costly affair, and one of the handsomest we ever saw, being, as before stated, of solid silver, beautifully ornamented, and bearing the inscription-

"Presented to Major Charles M. Stedman by Citisens of Wilmington, N. C., for his tions of French life in the past, however signal and unselfish services in destroying monopoly. May 2d, 1881."

The spoon and fork are also of silver, highly ornamented, and fit accompaniments to the fruit dish in the matter of elegance and beauty of finish.

The whole were inclosed in a very handsome and stylish Russiau leather case, lined with satin, and altogether comprised a present of which the most unappreciative and undemonstrative mortal might well feel in this connection the following correspondence speaks for itself:

THE OPERA HOUSE.

Col. D. K. McRae's Lecture. Col. McRae appeared under very embarrassing circumstances last night. He was from a sick bed to fill an engagement. A fair audience greeted his entrance. This was the seventh lecture this gifted gentleman has delivered in Wilmington, so our lecture-going people are well acquainted with his style and brilliancy. This obviates the necessity of any general or elaborate description and shortens materially what we have to say, as we took no notes and would not do him the gross and manifest injustice to attempt even a hurried resume of his line of thought and many illustraions and reflections.

His subject was Phantasmagoria. He was of course witty and sarcastic and full of pith and point. There were graphic delineations of character; brilliant, even gorgeous description; and all slong reflections devoting large observation and a penetrating insight into the wickedness of men. the foibles and sins of society, the frivolities and pretensions of men and women in high-life, and the dangers that threaten the body politic. He gave a rapid but really brilliant outline-picture of France through a succession of reigns marked by disasters and rampant diabolism, in which the genuine and the false, the frivolous and the inspired, the mean and the great, the corrupt and the noble played their little part in life's drams, and then the curtain fell on each actor as they were swallowed up in that eternity which no mortal has seen or may describe. All along, as each successive reign, or features in each reign were presented, he would break the continuity of thought by skipping from the past into the present, from remete France into the living present in the United States "to appoint a moral," to apply a cautery, or to insert the scalpel to let out the festering humors. It struck us he was more interested in his criticisms of current infections and the offensive gangrenes of the day than he was in his splendid descrippression when it is personal or hear than when remote and concerns the men and women who have been wrapt in their cerements for centuries. presented in a very pleasing and impressive urday, and oblige manner, despite the manifest physical disability under which the rarely gifted lecturer was suffering. The STAR on former occasions gave somewhat elaborate notices of Col. McRae's very striking lectures. Wil mington ought to appreciate them highly, for has done more than any one else to popularize in our midst that delightful and instructive form of entertainment, and to create a growing taste for lectures of the higher kind in our midst. Col. McRee, we regret to say, was compelled to cut short his lecture owing to his prostrate condition of body. He closed amidst rapturous ap-

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING STRUP.—Rev Sylvanus Cobb thus writes in the "Boston Christian Freeman":—We would by no means recommend any kind of medicine which we did not know to be good—particularly for infants. But of Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Byrup we can speak from knowledge; in our own family it has preved a blessing indeed, by giving an infant troubled with colic pains, quiet sleep, and its parents unbroken rest at aight. Most parents can appreciate these blessings. Here is an article which works to perfection, and which is harmless; for the sleep which it affords the infant is perfectly natural, and the little cherub awakes as "bright as a button." And during the process of teething its value is incalculable. We have frequently heard mothers say they would not be without it from the birth of the child till it had finished with the teething siege, on any consideration whatever.
