A New York letter in the Charleston News & Courier says the height of houses in that city makes a man's head dizzy. Some are ten and twelve stories high. Elevators are everywhere. He paid a few business calls and found he had gone up 806 feet or 62 stories, nearly twice the height of the great pyramid of Egypt. But it cost him no toil.

H. P. Hammett, of Piedmont Factory, S. C., in an elaborate speech before the State Grange, has great confidence in the success of Southern cotton mills. He enters upon a practical view of the whole question and gives excellent reasons why they can not fail. He says the South has an advantage over the North of at least ten per cent, and that well managed Southern mills must pay from 15 to hereafter.

Since the attempted assassination of President Garfield they will have 20 per cent. We may take occasion even less sympathy with political to draw upon parts of his speech murderers." Correct, Mr. P.

MEMEMBER TO-MORROW. The prohibitionists generally have no idea their bill will be ratified. We doubt if one can be found in the State who would risk a five-cent cigar on the result. Many of them admit that this is but the "entering wedge," the beginning of further agitation of this dangerous question.

Kill the bill by an overwhelming majority if you wish to keep it out of politics next year. THE KILLING OF JACKSON. Gen. Lane, of this city, no doubt knows as much about the killing of Gen. Jackson as any man who was in the army. He says emphatically that the 18th Regiment N. C. Troops, of his brigade, Col. Purdie, did the fatal shooting. Upon request, he gave his account of the matter through the Richmond Dispatch. That paper would do well to republish it. When Jackson, Hill and others on horseback came galloping towards Gen. Lane's brigade, then in line of battle, they were hailed, and the response "friends" being given, Major Barry (afterwards Colonel), of this city, and of the 18th North Carolina, replied, "It's a d-d lie," whereupon our men let drive with fatal results. Gen. Lane says he was just preparing to advance upon the enemy, having received the order from Gen. Jackson himself only some fifteen minutes before he was shot down. He says Gen. Pender came to him soon after the firing and said ther orders. The ablest literary weekly in the world is the London Saturday Review. Some years ago, we know, its regular staff consisted of twelve writers, besides sixty-eight contributors among the scholars and men of letters of Great Britain. This able weekly has been reviewing ex-President Davis's book. As the STAR aims for news and has a horror of long articles we cannot copy the article. The Review takes a fair and kindly view of the struggle of the South whilst "hating slavery righteously." We must copy a few sentences that are interesting in themselves and show the judicial candor and fairness with which this learned and able exponent of British thought and culture regards the war between the States. "The controversy as seen with Southern eyes and in reference to the treatment of the crushed Confederacy by the exultant North is referred to with much dignity by Mr. Jefferson Davis, once President of the seceded States, in his lately published 'Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government.' * * And if Mr. Jefferson Davis could have brought out his apologetic narrative close upon his loss of power, the history, written by the prime actor in the events which it chronicled, would, in all probability, made an appreciable sixth in the left hip, seventh in the left sensation. But the prisoner, treated with rigorous cruelty and placed upon his trial for his life on a charge of high treason, was not in a condition safely to vindicate actions and words which, in the eyes of his prosecutors, were the very corpus of the indictment. * * * * His volumes are emphatically addressed in the first place to his countrymen, Northern and Southern, many of whom and chiefly those in the most prominent positions, were actors or sufferers in the terrible war; and, in the second place, to the select, serene will prize such a record for the matter contained in it, as much as for the style in which that matter is worked out. To these, and therefore to the cause of historical research in general Mr. Jefferson Davis has, in his honored retirement, with much dignity and simplicity of purpose, offered a contribution of solid value, and for this we tender to him our sincere acknowledgments. The German Consul's Secretary at New York, Mr. Peterson, has this to say of the movements of the Nihilist, Hartmann: "I think Hartmann is here simply for safety. In Germany the people are not friendly to him, and in England he found the example made of Herr Most very discouraging. America is at present the only country that is open to criminal agitators of Hartmann's class. I do not think he will accomplish anything here. I do not believe that at heart even the lowest und most ignorant classes in this country sympathize with assas-sins, even of kings or autocrats.

"During the summer months, when money is always scarce with our people, we have only succeeded at all after hard work, and we had to take advantage as to prices, dr. Had the Legislature appropriated a sum sufficient to erect a monument suitable for the man, the case would have been different. Let me say in behalf of the Association, that it was not owing to any lack of State pride, but necessity compelled us to lose sight

They deposit their eggs under the leaves and the young lice can be seen coming out of the eggs. Rice looks well and promising. - Anderson, S. C., Intelligence: The friends of Major Redmond will be pleased to learn that notwithstanding he was seriously wounded when captured, he is getting well. His seven wounds—first in the back, second and third in the shoulder, fourth through the right arm, fifth and thigh—are, he writes, nearly all healed. His wounds are by large balls, two sixteen shooters and one Mississippi rifle being brought to bear upon him, besides some muskets and double-barrel shot guns. He writes that twenty-five or thirty shots were fired at him. His trial will be had at Asheville, N. C. at the November term of court. Col. C. M. He had a washpan full of blasting powder and a piece of fuse The Enterprise says: "He took the fuse from the package and told his wife to bring him a coal of fire so that he could show his two little daughters, aged two and four years, who were standing near the powder, he working of the fuse. He said he would ight it and throw it into the yard. The fire was brought, and immediately on touching the fuse a spark fell into the powder and a fearful explosion immediately followed. The father was blown into the yard and the two children were burned into a perfect crisp, from head to foot. Both dead. Mr. and Mrs. Sigman were both severely, but neither seriously, burned. - Goldsboro Messenger: Some miserable wretch entered the buggy depostory of Mr. W. H.
