Wiggins' Storm. Up to the present writing (6:30 P. M.) there have been no positive indications of a storm striking us, though the weather has been very threatening, and intelligence from below represents a heavy gale prevailing at the mouth of the river. At the Signal Office we were told that there were no indications of any unusual commotion, but that rains were reported to be pretty general. Our noon telegram from the Washington office also tended to reassure us as to any fears of an immediate visitation on the part of Wiggins' flurry.
