Brinn recovered but not quick enough to prevent him from striking him again on the fore part of the head. By this time Brinn had sufficiently recovered as to make fight with the negro, and managed to catch hold of the bolt. The negro kicked him several times and struck him in the mouth with his fist. The cry and screams of Brinn alarmed the villagers, and with axes and guns they made for the jail and rushed to his relief, when they beheld Brinn drenched in blood, with two frightful gashes upon the head, but with his right hand, in the collar of old Paxton, and with the left hand holding one end of the iron bolt and the bloody minded negro the other. The negro was at once handcuffed, and it was with great difficulty that the crowd could be prevented from mobbing him. Brinn was not fatally injured.

Joint Discussion Between Stedman and Faircloth-A Royal Reception to Pender's Favorite-Large Attendance from Pender and Adjoining Counties-Presentation of Flowers, &c., &c.

[Special Star Report].

At this important point of convergance of the counties of Bladen, Sampson and Pender, a large crowd assembled yesterday, from these counties, to hear the discussion between Judge Faircloth and Major Stedman. As the steamer, bearing these speakers from Wilmington, moved to the wharf, the vociferous shouts of the multitude of Democrats who had assembled to greet and welcome the able and eloquent Democratic candidate for Lieut. Governor were deafening, and protracted to a degree that evinced not alone the confidence, but the great consideration and affection entertained for him by the people of these and surrounding counties. Immediately a large procession, headed by a fine company of horsemen, took him in charge, and bore him in triumph around the town to the fine stand erected for the speaking.

The scene was inspiring to the Democrats. In front was the United States flag, suspended from a large oak tree, and near by a large and tall Democratic pole pointed well to the skies, with a beautiful flag at the top, on which was inscribed in fine letters, "Cleveland, Scales and Stedman." And then enthusiasm brightly shone in the faces of Democratic ladies and gentlemen -for the ladies as well as the white men of this county are ardently devoted to Sted-

It was Judge Faircloth's turn to speak first, and he did so, addressing a large audience of both parties and races. The Judge is undoubtedly one of the ablest Republican speakers that has been on the stump in North Carolina during this canvass, and his Republican friends here were in high glee. He made the same - Go to the speaking at the Wig-s speech he has made at every point at which he has spoken in this canvass, and in this relation is certainly consistent. He dwelt for an hour and a half on education, revenue, the tariff, the blessings of Republican rule, &c., and the Democrats united with the Republicans in giving him a respectful hearing and in showing him

Maj. Stedman followed, for the same length of time, in one of those brilliant, logical and effective speeches that have, this very year, placed him high up n the ladder of public orators. His effort here to-day showed the public judgment to be correct in estimating him to be in the front ranks of our most convincing, attractive, and effective campaigners. As he riddled to pieces the arguments and sophistries of his competitor, and showed up, in his masterly manner, the unconstitutional courses and sectional tendencies, and doctrines, and corruptions of the Republican party, the feelings and blood of Democrats rose higher and higher, and deeper and stronger did this winning orator, and yet bold and aggressive speaker, send conviction and new life and energy into the hearts of freemen. Every one who heard this able champion of the white race and the cardinal doctrines of Democracy as with withering power and stirring eloquence he levelled his invincible arguments and sledge-hammer blows at the Republican party, felt that North nearly three-fourths of the negroes kept | Carolina has, in Major Stedman, not alone a chivalrous gentleman and whole-souled North Carolinian, but a comprehensive and coming statesman, destined to fill, by popular choice, the highest gift of the Democracy of our State. No political speaker has won so much and such solid reputation this year in North Carolina as he has, and this is the verdict everywhere pronounced

Yesterday he handled with much ability and success the issues of the campaign, and impressed himself deeply upon the crowd assembled from the counties named. The applause was frequent and emphatic, and shows that Maj. Stedman has rare powers of stirring the masses, and of giving them rich patriotic material to take home with them to think about and to act upon. He deserves high praise and grateful appreciation at the hands of the Democracy of the State for his brilliant and magnificent can-

And it is but justice to say of Judge Faircloth, that he has served his party well and with more ability than any of the Republican speakers who have upheld the Republican cause in this protracted campaign be-Four young men of this city, disregar-d | tween him and Maj. Stedman. But the oulk of his party admit, as is patent when ever debate has been had between them that Stedman uses Faircloth up completely and overwhelms him with his eloquence and power in a most striking manner.

The reception given to Maj. Stedman at Point Caswell was simply splendid, and is the best eulogy on his high character and great popularity among the masses of the counties named. His friends could not wish for more for him than was so cordially and enthusiastically acceded to him to day. He showed his high appreciation by feeling words and grateful acknowledgments that showed him to be a man who loves his friends and who has a heart full of devotion to the people, and of broad and generous sympathies for their rights and interests. These facts are giving him an immense hold upon the masses, for they appreciate his high qualities of head and
