WILMINGTON, N. C. WEDNESDAY EVENING, JULY 1, 1885. EVENING EDITION.

OUR COLLEGES.

There is steady growth and improvement in North Carolina colleges. The University is preparing for higher and greater achievements.

Davidson College is making changes in its faculty. Rev. Dr. Lefevre of Baltimore, the newly elected President, will probably be able to give a fresh impulse to the institution.

Trinity College, under the new order of things, promises a wider usefulness and a more efficient corps of teachers. The three generous and appreciative laymen who have come to its support...

important sense the hope of the State. Wilmington has excellent female schools, but of these we will not write at length as they have been often noticed in our local columns.

The male schools of the State are well sustained and are doing a generous work. The State is much blessed in having some of the best classical schools in the Union.

We think it can be said with truth that each year witnesses a deeper interest in the progress and improvement of the schools of the State. The public are taking a profounder and more general interest in the closing exercises of both male and female institutions.

The Star feels a genuine pride in the schools of the State. It believes they are an ornament and an honor to North Carolina.

APPRECIATION ABOARD.

There is one thing in which the Northern people are not hide-bound or selfish. They will read Southern books, buy and praise them. It is perhaps not too much to say that Southern writers of genius are more accurately and more highly appreciated in the educated North...

Southern papers are much less cordial, and, in the main, much less acute and just, than the criticisms in Northern papers and periodicals of the best class even when Southern authors are under consideration.

Sidney Lanier was a man of genuine genius. He reflected credit upon our country. His poems and prose writings are warmly eulogized in the cultured centres in the North.

Unquestionably Harry Timrod was a true singer, a man of fine poetical genius. He has not been surpassed by but two or three of our Southern poets, if by so many.

This looks emphatic enough, but the Washington correspondent of the Times, Mr. Charles Nordoff, an able, cautious writer, says that it is all a lie, and that the President says "there is no truth whatever in this dispatch."

The Mormons are moving upon Mexico. They have two emissaries at work in the City of Mexico, and they are about to buy large tracts of land in the northern part of the country.

A DISCIPLINED THUNDERBOLT.

Archibald Forbes gives his Impressions of the Great Prince, London Daily News. Were I called on to define Prince Frederick Charles in two words I should style him a disciplined thunderbolt. The first time I ever saw Prince Frederick Charles was on the afternoon of Massé's Tour.
