EVENING EDITION

TWO NOTABLE ENGLISH DIVINES. Prof. E. H. Phumtre, one of the most eminent of English divines, and a scholar of the first rank, has published a book recently entitled, "Spirits in Prison and Other Studies on the Life after Death." We have not seen the work, but have read several critical notices of it. Like all of his writings it is striking in force, learning and acuteness. We refer to it more particularly because he reinforces Canon Farrar's "Eternal Hope" to some extent. We do not know that he goes the length of Dr. Farrar, or that he accepts the idea of universal salvation. But it is asserted that he shows with most marked learning that from the days of Origen it has been supported by men of the rarest learning and ability. He shows that Jeremy Taylor and John Milton both held to this doctrine. It is said to be a most interesting volume and strong "in the range of inquiry and in the wealth of critical and historical scholarship brought to bear rethe subject."

This work has not been attacked as Farrar's book was, and one critic says it is an evidence "of the pro gress of popular thought towards the Eternal Hope." Be that as it may, there has been in all ages since Christ a class of minds that sought to smooth the way to Heaven and to get rid of the sterner teachings of the revealed Word. While here and there great men even have accepted the doctrine of universal salvation they have done it at a great sacrifice. and have been met by the sanctified learning and devoted zeal of ten thousand disputants as learned, as able, as religious as they.

Canon Farrar is soon to visit the United States. His works on Christ, St. Paul and the early Christians, three in all, are very delightful reading-full of learning and boldness and beauty of style. He is said to be a preacher of uncommon excellence, and in the Established Church of England has now but one rival in Canon Liddon. As a writer of popular religious works he has no living rival. His books have a decided charm to most readers, and if his rhetoric is rather too rich, too glowing, too excessive, he makes reparation in the sincerity and beauty of much that he writes. He will moet with a most cordial reception in the North, and more especially for his striking and sympathetic eulogy on Gen. Grant. The New York Times says of his peculiar qualities as an author and as a preacher:

"His growth has been chiefly two fold. He has given his time to extensive Biblical studies in the attempt to make the New Testament a fresh and real book to the present generation, utilizing the labors of other scholars to this end, and again he has thrown himself with great zeal into efforts for improving the condition of humanity. Since the death of Maurice and Kingaley no Englishman has taken more "Besides, if the qualification for office be shown greater capacity for their protreatment. * * Certain men become known in a nation's development for things which no one else can do so well, and Archdeacon Farrar holds this sort of position in the English Church and State. This does not mean that he is one of English? land's greatest men so much as that he has represent qualities which are held in high honor among intellectual and cul-tivated people, and has shown himself able to speak the sentiments which a nation must intrust to its great natural orators and

BISHOP GREEN AND GEN. CRANT. The hoopskirt yarn of Northern liars has come to grief. Mr. Davis's body servant, Miles Howard, said it was a falsehood out and out. A Southern officer in the Century exposed the lie completely and Mr. Davis himself denies it squarely. That is enough. We refer to it again because of a recent act of Bishop W. M. Green, of Mississippi. He has published a correspondence with Gen. Grant relative to the slanders of ex-President Davis. The venerable Bishop, now some 86 or 87 years of age, on the 15th of June, 1885, addressed a letter to Gen. Grant and it is a capital one every way. The aged and honored prelate never did any thing better. It is so admirably worded and so dignified, courteous and gentlemanly that we must make room for a somewhat long passage from it. After referring to the General's reputation and calling attention to a rumor in the papers that he was about to adopt the slander upon Davis as true, the revered North Carolinian said:

and published, at a time of high political excitement, when groundless rumors and disparaging statements were too readily credited by both sides of the contending parties. From time to time the thing has een repeated by the vulgar and ignorant: and the friends of Mr. Davis have been willing to let it pass as undeserving their attention. But when it appears that your noble and generous spirit is about to record your belief in that false and foolish story, and your honored hand is prepared to pass it down the line of authentic history, every admirer of your name throughout our wide spread South, as well as every friend of Mr. Davis, would unite in respectfully and earnestly begging you to withhold your hand. There lies before me at this moment, a conidential letter from Mr. Davis, giving me at my particular request, a circumstantial account of his capture, and denying, most positively, that he either made any at-tempt to escape, after being surprised by his pursuers, or disguised himself in woman's clothing. A similar denial was af-terwards made by Mr. Harrison, the private secretary of Mr. Davis, and by the Hon. Messrs. Reagan and Lubbock, who were

"This slanderous story was gotten up,

"Let me hope, then, dear sir, that with your usual magnanimity, you will scorn, as it certainly would seem, to strike a fallen foe, and wound the feelings of thousands and tens of thousands who, since the asperities of war have passed away, have come to regard you with pride and esteem, as an honor to our country, as well as to the list of the world's best and most success

The occasion allowed the venerable Bishop to indulge in higher praise than the Northern hero's record would authorize, but all men are prone to excess in the presence of human suffering and unwonted fortitude. Bishop Green accomplished his purpose as the following reply

"Mount McGregor, June 24, 1885. DEAR BISHOP:-Gen. Grant directs me to say the passage you refer to will not ap-pear in his book and that it was by a mis take it got into the papers.

Respectfully,

F. D. GRANT."

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE LAW We are glad to see that Gen. Roger A. Pryor is inclined to doubt the constitutionality of the Civil Service law, and regards the system in plain English a fraud. He said to a New York Herald reporter:

"I think the law futile, mischievous and epugnant to the genius of our government Of course I am in favor of appointing none other than honest and capable officials; but this new fangled expedient misses the ob-"Are you in favor of partisan appoint-

"I am in favor of rotation in office, aud I think that the party in power should have the privilege and bear the responsibility of appointing its agents in the conduct of the administration,"

That opinion will hold water, and it is the opinion of ninety-nine Democrats in the one hundred, we have no doubt, throughout the South. The Republicans act upon the principle of rotation, and if in 1889, a Republican President comes in the Democrats will have their official heads chopped off most unceremoniously. The South expects Democrats to be put in charge, but it expects them to be both honest and capable and in no sense whatever partisans in office. Let the running of the Government be given to those out of office. Gen. Pryor said of the constitutionality of the law: "I have had no opportunity for thorough study of the subject, and therefore I am as unwilling as unprepared to venture a decided opinion upon it. But I confess that the inclination on my mind, at first blush, is to the conclusion that the civil service is to the conclusion that the civil service act is invalid, as imposing an illegal restriction upon the absolute power of appointment conferred by the constitution. An appointment to office does not mean merely a formal nomination, but involves discretion and responsibility; and in so far as discretion and responsibility are taken away, to that extent is the power of appointment qualified and limited, contrary to the express provision and manifest intent of the constitution.

"If the President be limited to a selec-

"BECKET."

Certain American penny-a-liners could not find a line of any merit in Tennyson's last dramatic poem, "Becket." We remember that the New York World was especially flippant. No one with a cultivated taste could possibly fail to find "Queen Mary" and "Harold" entertaining and because of much fine poetry and some fine dramatic scenes. Blackwood's Magazine says that "Becket" is "decidedly the best" of the three historical dramas. It says that in the last there are "more pathetic lines, more sayings worth remembering, more passages worth quoting than in the other dramas put together." We copy this that our readers may see what a high literary authority thinks. In no country on the globe is there so much unfair, ignorant, jejune criticism as in the United States.

Blackwood does not regard "Beck et" as in any sense great. It evidently does not consider it a success even. It thinks that the poet had a grand subject, but failed to make anything like as much of it as it could be made. It regrets that Shakespeare never directed his attention to this part of English history and did not make the great Archbishop the theme of one of his grandest dramas. It thinks Tennyton failed to grasp the great opportunities and situations of the subject. It thinks the song pretty and much of the verse striking and poetical. We must say that some of the passages quoted by the reviewer impress us as very grand. We close with the "Tennyson's version of the meeting of the King's four knights with the Archbishop is uniformly good. The gentleness of his preceding talk with his trusted friend throws into strong relief the courage with which he defies his assassins:

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle of New York has issued its report of the year's cotton crop. Ending 31st August, 1885, the total crop was 5,669,821 bales. It is not impossible for the Democrats to carry the next Legislatures in Connecticut, New York and New Jersey. This has been done in the past and may be done again. We do not undertake to say that it will be done, but we believe that it is within the possibilities to do it. If the Democrats were heartily united and would work to that end three Senators might be gained and this would help prodigiously in the next Senate. With that body under Democratic control such legislation could be perfected as the country at large needs very much. The Democrats must be stirred to the performance of their full duty if they would accomplish the grand and much de-

The North would do well to attend to its own affairs and stamp out crime and villainy at home before mounting its Rosinante to go out on a tilt against the South and its faults and offences.

We agree with the Boston Post that a Republican must be very much of a hog who grumbles at the removal of postmasters in New England when there are still twelve of their number to every one Democrat in possession of a postoffice in the CURRENT COMMENT.

- In illustration of Chaffee's style of argument, let us quote from his letter to the New York Tribune, where he says: "If General Grant had believed Tilden rightfully elected, he had plenty of time to recognize the McEnery government in Louisi-ana before Hayes was seated, which would doubtless have given the State to Tilden, and no Electoral Commission would have been created." "The McEnery government" was the one which claimed to have been elected in 1872, but which Grant disnosed of by recognizing the Kelogg government. At the time of the Hayes-Tilden contest the "Mc-Enery government" had been forgotten for two years and was not in he remotest degree in question. Gen. Grant might have believed thousand times over, he might have known, that Tilden was elected, yet no one but a raving lunatic would have expected him to express his conviction by "recognizing" Mc-Enery in Louisiana. He had certainly never believed that McEnery was elected in 1872, and why he should have recognized him in 1876 not even Chaffee himself could explain. The fact is that Chaffee doesn't know anything about it at all. - Wash. Post, Dem.

-- The use of word "lady" to describe everything of the woman kind is epidemic all over the country. The good old Anglo-Saxon word woman is supposed by the victims of this pitiful mania to convey a reproach. The noble word "wife, with all its endearing details of love, trust and devotion, has been compelled to give place to this prim and meaningless substitute. The world has nothing better in it than a true woman and a true wife, and to try to improve on the terms that indicate them is like trying to paint the lily .- Boston Commonwealth.

OUR STATE CONTEMPORARIES.

Of one thing we have no doubt-that the people of the South are far better qualified by past experience as well as by interest to solve the question as to the future status of the black man than any other people. Contact with the white race of the South has done more for the negro race than all other agencies combined. Under the guidance of the Southern white men the negro will make all the progress in civilization of which he is capable. But miracles are not to be expected. The work of civilizing the man has been a work of ages, and he is not yet a very sdvanced piece of perfection, take him on the average. Mr. Warner's dispassionate discussion of this subject will, we hope, do something towards enlightening the minds of those Northern readers who desire to know the truth.-Hickory

We think Worcester comes near the spelling and pronunciation of pure English than perhaps any other of our dictionaries. Webster undertook to make the language conform to his own false ideas of spelling and pronunciation. In this he has done the language great harm. The first editions were simply barbarous. Public sentiment forced a change, and the last editions are nearly in conformity with to the best standards. Webster's Unabridged, indexed edition, is a magnificent volume, and very useful to have. It contains a wonderful amount of varied information, done in a most excelstyle .- Pittsboro Home.

(By Telegraph to the Morning Star. NEW YORK, Sept. 12.—The oil ware-house and factory of Swan & Finch, at No. 115 Maiden Lane, was destroyed by fire this foreneon. The flames extended to the southern half of the double building and damaged the stock of leaf tobacce of Lichtenstein Bros. to the extent of about $40,000. Swan & Finch's loss is put at $25,000, and the loss on building at $10,-000. The entire available force of the fire department in the lower district was called out to fight the flames that threatened the surrounding buildings. They were confined within the original limits. The insurance covers the losses.

The fire broke out very suddenly in the factory in rear of No. 115, and surprised the people in the building. Before some of the occupants bethought themselves of escape, the exit by the stairs was cut off by the fire. John Zigler, an aged carpenter, who was at work on the third floor of the building, ran to the window and, letting himself down, hung from the sill for a minute or more, shout ing for help, until some one brough a tall step ladder, and mounting it reached nim and let him down. Zigler was badly burned about the hands and arms. John Donnelly, a pressman in the oil factory, alid down the fall rope from the floor through the elevator hole, with his clothes aflame. He was very badly burned, and with Zigler was taken to the Chambers Street hospital. Capt. at contracted a fearful case of blood poison h is contracted a fearful case of blood poison in 1883. I was treated by some of the best physicans in Atlanta. They used the old remedia of class in Atlanta. They used the old remedia of the man and impaired my digestive organs. Kvery joint in me was swollen and full of pain. I was joint in me was swollen and full of pain. I was in a horrible condition. When I had been given up to die, my physicians, who had seen the workings of the medicine in other cases, thought it would be a splendid time to test the virtues of Swit's Specific. When I commenced taking so so the physicians said I could not live two weeks under the ordinary treatment. He commenced to give me the medicine strictly according to directions, which I continued for several months. I took nothing else, and commenced to improve from the first. Occasionally I would have a backset from imprudence. Soon the rheumatism left me, my appetite became all right, and the ulcers, which the doctor said were the most frightful he had ever seen, began to heal, and by the first of October, 1884, I was a well man again. Lem McClendon has been in the employ of the Chess Carley Company for some years, and I know the above statements to be true. At the time he began taking Swift's Specific he was in a condition, and at my solicitation his horrible condition, and at my solicitation his treatment with S. S. S. was undertaken by a physician after several others had declared his case to be hopelessly incurable. He took nothing but S. S. S., and has been as sound as a new dollar
