EVENING EDITION.

M'CLURE'S ADDRESS.

We marked a large number of passages in the excellent address of the Philadelphia editor upon which we might comment if time and space allowed. It always takes more space to refute than to assert, and to analyze than to state. The address is most noticeable. Col. McClure, as we showed in our editorial of Sunday, placed in the front as the cause of the war between the States the antagonizing theories held in the two sections as to the Constitution. As we mentioned, he forget that there was a strong Democratic minority in the North that held the view of Jefferson, whilst in the South there was a strong minority that held the view of Hamilton, or as modified by Washington and Webster. Col McClure thinks that if Hamilton had fully triumphed over Jefferson, "and made centralization a positive feature of the new Republic," there would have been "danger of disrup-He says that "Centralized governmental authority had visible peril; it invited despotic elements to effort; it appealed to the human infirmity that grasps power; and its logical tendency is to the stealthy abridgment of popular rights." This is true. The Southern Democratic leaders saw this from the beginning, and fought the tendency as one of evil and danger.

When the Constitution was framed there were two opposing principles that were sought to be incorporated. Hamilton, Adams and their friends succeeded to a considerable extent in shaping the Constitution according to their ideas. But of course not altogether. The Constitution was framed in actual distrust of the people. But this would not answer. So after Thomas Jefferson had returned from France he went to work with his masterly pen to so educate the public mind as to the dangers that lurked in the Constitution-dangers to their rights and privileges-that the result was the twelve Amendments to the Constitution that were framed in behalf of the people and in distrust of the centralized power in the original instrument. It is necessary to know this, because it is very important. After George Washington selected John Marshall as Chief Justice and placed Hamilton in charge of the Treasury Department then a new assault upon the sovereign rights of States began. Hamilton, as 18 well known to the careful student of the history of those times, having been partially checkmated in his plan of a strong Government, determined to give the broadest possible interpretation to the instrument. He was the loosest of all loose constructionists of his time. He was almost as great a proficient in the guttapercha system of interpretation as the latter day constitutional lawyers who can see in the organic law authority for Congress to do anything, even to teach the public schools in the States. Judge Marshall made decisions in favor of the powers of the General Government that did more to give force and direction to centralized governmental ideas than all that Washington, Hamilton and John Adams ever did. Col. McClure accepts it as true that the war settled the dispute between the powers of States and the powers of the General Government, and all in favor of the latter. He accepts the statement that this is Nation; that the Sovereign power of the Nation is supreme, and that henceforth there is no such thing in our system as the sovereign power of States. This is a dangerous heresy. He says Lincoln's election solved the problem of the supremacy of the Nation over the States. He says that if the South had succeeded that it "would have brought anarchy in the North.' Very likely. He says there was bound to be a war if the South attempted to withdraw. He says the quarrel assumed the shape-"Whether State or Nation was sovereign."

Before Lincoln's election the Na tion was not sovereign, according to McClure. So Lincoln's election solidified the powers and created a Nation, and the Nation being supreme at last must fight if States not sovereign attempted to withdraw. This gives more significancy and importance to Lincoln's election than had been admitted by Northern writers. War came, the South was vanquished, and with it went down the sovereignty of States. Such is the theory, and it is the one that prevails all through the North-a theory that sets up a grand consolidated centralized Government that is always infringing upon the rights of the States-upon the liberties of the people-upon the precious muniments of the Constitution. According to this accepted theory all the reserved rights under the Constitution are only so many words without meaning or potency. But if Col. McClure accepts all this, he is not indifferent to dangers to our institution that lurk in the overthrow of the supremacy of the States-in the destruction of State sovereignty. He sees peril in the pathway of supreme National sovereignty. Of course we do not agree with him that either Lincoln's election or the results of the war determined that this was a Nation and that the States were stripped forever of their sovereignty. We believe no such thing. Thank God the Constitution still stands and the reserved rights are still expressed. The States will not agree to surrender powers that are guaranteed to them in the sacred instrument. It is not true that the war has "dismantled the sovereignty of the State." The States have been violated, invaded, greatly outraged in their rights-that is true. The work began when the strong North, backed by the people of Europe, made war upon the Southern States. The work was continued when Lincoln violated law, invaded sovereign States with his proclamation and troops, and it was continued in reconstruction times when the bayonets were set over ballots, when Legislatures were throttled after the true Cromwellian and Napoleonic way, and when the North looked on ling to believe. But Col. McClure draws a distinction. He must have safety and hope somewhere. So he says that "the absolute sovereighty of the American people" remains. This would be difficult to prove. It has no solid basis. If the States are despoiled and stripped of all power, and the Nation is supreme-is everything, how can the people be sovereign also? The Charleston News and Courier at this point says-and we have just seen it:

and said well done. There will be no more attempts to break up the Union peacably. Secession at least is dead, but if the McClure theory is correct

-if the war has enthrowned the Nation, and taken from the States

all the rights reserved to them under the Constitution, then indeed the work of destruction was far greater in the war than we have been wil-

"There is no sovereignty in the American people anywhere, except as the people speak and act through the States of which they are citizens. The will of the people is the supreme law, but that will is expressed and convergence.

the only national expression that we can have, for without the States there are no States united, no United States. Without the States there is no Congress, no Federal judiciary, no President. Take away the States and nothing is left. So falls to the ground the vicious ideas of some intangible and irresponsible national authority which is independent of, and separate from, the power given to the General Government, as their agent, by the States of the Union.

THE TRIUMPHAL JOURNEY. No one can read the London accounts of the journey of Mr. Gladstone from that city to Edinburgh without at once realizing how strong is the hold of the great statesman upon the common people of England. It was indeed a magnificent triumph. At nearly every station along the entire route-nearly three hundred miles-and they are very numerous, the crowds were immense and the enthusiasm surpassing any thing ever seen. At Edinburgh 40,-000 people received him. He spoke at several points, and he stuck to the one idea of his last speech in Parliament-home rule for Ireland such as North Carolina has. He said at one

'Will you give Ireland what you give the colonies with the greatest advantagepower to manage, not Imperial, but Irish ffairs? During my 54 years of public life I never saw enthusiasm everywhere to equal that which has been shown in this great cause. The eyes of the world are now upon us in a degree never equalled before. Not only the whole British race, but the whole civilized mankind, have testified the iveliest interest in the question. If, as I have every reason to believe, the verdict is favorable to the people of Ireland, there will be nothing less than a thrill of joy throughout the civilized world. I place before you this noble object-human sympathy combined with justice—and com-mend it to your deep and deliberate consideration; for you have never had an issue to determine more charged with good or evil to the future advancement of this

All his speeches were received with the greatest enthusiasm. He makes the one issue plain, direct, so that all can understand. He is for giving to Ireland what Australia and Canada have-a home legislature for governing domestic matters. A legislature for Ireland as North Carolina has a legislature, but without interfering with the Imperial Parliament and its functions and powers. North Carolina sends members to the Federal Congress. This question will be settled, and settled in favor of Ireland. If not now, it will come before a lustrum has elapsed.

The reports from the many coun' ties in North Carolina, as far as our exchanges have given them, with but few exceptions, are very favorable. It is a mistake to say that all crops in every county are most promising. In some sections the oat crop was a dead failure. Wheat is not universally good although the crop promises a fine average yield. The excessive rains may cause the cut wheat to sprout in the fields. Cotton is generally good. The tobacco crop is not uniformly promising. The acreage is reduced as it ought to be, but the cotton area is larger. The rye crop is reported good. Altogether the outlook is full of encouragement for a more than

CURRENT COMMENT.

- Henry George illustrates the doctrine of protection in this fashion: "Imagine a village of, say, a hundred voters. Imagine two of these villagers to make such a proposition as this: 'We are desirous, fellowcitizens, of seeing you more prosperous, and to that end propose this plan: Give us the privilege of collecting a tax of five cents a day from every one in the village; no one will feel the tax much, for even to a man with a wife and eight children it will only come to the paltry sum of fifty cents a day. Yet this slight tax will give our village two rich citizens who can afford to spend money. We will at once begin to live in commensurate style. We will enlarge our houses and improve our grounds, set up carriages, hire servants, give parties, and buy much more freely at the stores. This will make trade brisk and cause a greater demand for labor. This, in turn, will create a greater demand for agricultural productions, which will enable the neighboring farmers to make a greater demand for store goods and the labor of mechanics. Thus shall we all become prosperous,"

--- The dairy man or the "honest" farmer is left free to impose on the public any such stuff as he chooses to call butter and charge for it what he pleases, and people who don't like it or who have not money to pay for it, must pay an additional tax of five cents on every pound of oleomargarine. It was vile enough before, no doubt, but with this additional tax what kind of adulterations will the manufacturers be forced to use in order to make a profit? And all for what? Certainly not for revenue, for it is acknowledged that the federal revenue is already larger than is needed, though that pretense must be made in order to bring it within the powers of Congress. It is in fact a "protective tariff" pure and simple and as flagrant a violation of the rights of propriety as was ever perpetrated while the war was raging. It is a robbery of the great mass of the people for the benefit of a few favored individuals—and yet it is the measure of a Democratic Congress. -Montgomery, Ala., Dispatch, Dem.
