The Blow Last Night.

The strong northeasterly winds yesterday evening and last night created alarm of an approaching cyclone, but fortunately the alarm was apparently groundless. The Signal Service reports at 3 p. m. yesterday contained no indications of the presence of a well developed storm in any quarter. Generally low barometer throughout the South was the only striking feature, which is a favorable condition for the production of local storms. By 10 o'clock last night the barome ter at most places had undergone but slight changes, with the exception of Wilmington, where it had fallen about five-hundredths of an inch. No high winds were reported from any point along the coast except in this vicinity. The storm is thus either local or due to some cyclonic disturbance off the coast. The spasmodic blowing of the wind, however, ren dered the latter cause improbable, as winds occasioned by a decided depression are generally steady and not variable like those last night.

The highest velocity reached up to midnight was twenty-eight miles an hour at 11.10 p. m.
