Coldest of the Season

The minimum of the cold wave had not reached this section yesterday, as a glance at the weather map issued by the Signal Office in this city plain ly showed. The centre of the wave appeared in northwestern Minnesota early yesterday morning, when the temperature fell as low as 40 degrees below zero and the barometic pressure rose to the unusual height of 30.95 inches. The barometer during the night n this section rose about a quarter of an inch-reaching 29.34 inches. This still indicates a vast difference in the pressure, which will tend to still further reduce the temperature and proloag the present cold snap. There is, however, one atmospheric condition existing which will slightly moderate the approach of the area of high pressure. The depression which passed over this section a few days ago is still lingering in the Eastern States, and offers more favorable inducements to the approach of the wave. The high pressure will naturally incline to the low, so that its principal force will be exerted in this new direction and the equalizing of the pressure will be more gradual and its effects less se-The temperature fell below freezing yesterday as far south as the northern boundary of Florida. Jacksonville reported the temperature at freezing at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. In this city at the same hour, the mercury stood at 28, which was 32 degrees lower than at the corresponding hour the preceding day. The atmosphere was dry and the sky clear, so that the sun was shining with good effect, and the day seemed rather pleasant, although the thermometer did not register above 45 degrees. By 10 p. m. the temperature had fallen to 30 degrees and still continued on its downward course.
