Truck Farming that Pays.

Fall and winter truck farming is immensely profitable, if one may judge from reports received from the tidewater section of Virginia, where it has been industriously followed for years. The truck growers around Wilmington might well make a note of it. The Progress of Suffolk, Va., referring to the matter, says: "Mr. John L. Babcock, one of our "Bay shore" truckers, shipped green peas to New York this week at $2.50 per basket bushel. His shipment was 75 baskets. He has a large quantity coming on to send yet.

the season on the 7th of December, for which he received $4 per basket bushel." The same paper says: "Nearly all of the truckers raise two crops on the same land a year, many of them three and some of them four. In the winter they raise kale, spinnach, celery, cabbage, &c., in the spring and summer various kinds of vegetables, and now in the fall they are raising green peas and other tender vegetables for shipment to the Northern
