WILMINGTON, N. C.

FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 17, 1891.

WILL BLAINE BE IN IT?

There is a report from Washington to the effect that a party of Blaine boomers recently visited Washington for the purpose of getting Mr. Blaine's consent to the use of his name as a Presidential candidate in 1892. He met them graciously and in reply to their request, after hesitating for some time, said he could not consent to enter the race against President Harrison. But he said it in such a way that his friends left him feeling that while Blaine could not announce himself as a candidate they were at liberty to boom him in their own way, which they proposed to do.

Blaine's position is a somewhat peculiar one. As far as leadership, statesmanship, personal magnetism and personal popularity go he overshadows Harrison in every particular. He has ten devoted followers to Harrison's one, and yet because he occupies a place in the cabinet he has to play second fiddle to Harrison and swallow his aspirations and throttle his ambition lest he give offense to the envious, ambitious man whom he made President Harrison knows, as the whole country knows, that Blaine is by long odds the most conspicuous figure in the Republican party, that he is the only man in it who possesses the elements of leadership to an eminent degree, that if a poll of the Republican party were taken as to the choice for the nomination for the Presidency as between Harrison and Blaine, Blaine would get ten votes to Harrison's two. Wherever the test has been made of the Republican members of Legislatures this has been about the proportion, and yet Harrison has the adamantine cheek to expect Blaine to tuck himself away, and leave the field all to him. In fact he has substantially said, if not in so many words, that he don't expect any member of his cabinet to listen to any suggestion of a nomination, remarks which would apply only to Mr. Blaine as there was, as he knew, no other member of his cabinet figuring in that role or liable in any way to antagonize his efforts for a re-nomination.

did not originate with him. But he had the sagacity to utilize it and try to work it in as a part of the policy of the Republican party, as an offset to the increased tariff rates proposed by the McKinley bill, which he made no secret of condemning. While McKinley & Co. found it necessary to accept reciprocity in favor of which public sentiment was so pronounced, they so manipulated it as to give Blaine the least advantage from it and to put it in the power of Mr. Harrison to declare when and where it should go into operation. Harrison, Reed and Mc-Kinley were determined that he should reap the smallest possible amount of prestige and glory from his reciprocity, which in a modified form they have incorporated into the McKinley monstrosity.

But the most striking evidence of this jealousy was exhibited when Mr. Harrison interrupted negotiations for reiprocity with Canada and snubbed both Blaine and the Canadian commission by telling them that they would have to postpone the conference agreed upon, for which the commission had come by appointment to Washington, until his return from his swinging around the circle. This was a surprise to both Blaine and the commission, neither of whom anticipated such a capricious hitch as that. The commission was highly incensed, Blaine was mortified and has been chafing over it ever since. He couldn't resent it without an open rupture with the administration, which would have arrayed against him the army of Harrison's officeholders. He was too shrewd to do that. But since then he has had less indisposition to antagonize Harrison's nomination if it can be done without seeming to be instruhe now feels justified in putting himself "in the hands of his friends" without saying so in so many words, and letting them manipulate the wires according to their own judgment, a quiet way from him. And then if his nomination be regarded as "essential to party success," of course, he will accept it, unless he comes to the conclusion in the meantime that there is no use in any Republican ac cepting it. With this proviso, it may be concluded that, if Blaine was was convicted of murder thirty five years ago and sentenced to imprisonment for life. It has been lately ascertained that he killed the man in self-defence, and that he was convicted on perjured testimony by the State's witnesses. He has been released and now applies to the State for indemnity. He can get none, for there is no law to grant indemnity when the State convicts and wrongfully punishes. This man has served thirty-five years in prison at hard labor; he comes out to find his property gone, his family scattered, and himself a stranger in the community to which he returns where thirty-five years ago he was wrongfully branded and condemned as a murderer. There is no redress, but there should be. The State claiming to be a sovereign body, which it is, holds that it can do no wrong, although it does wrong frequently. The State arrests a man on suspicion, or on false testimony, holds him in jail for an indefinite period, and when tried it turns out that the wrong man has been arrested, or it convicts on false testimony or on circumstantial evidence. and discovers later that the man was wrongfully convicted and punished, but there is no reparation in either case. This is wrong. The State which demands justice, and administers justice should do justice to those who become the innocent victims of its power, when their innocence is established. This would be demanded of an individual, it should be conceded by the State.

Secretary Blaine's reply to the last note of Premier Rudini in reference to the demands in the New Orleans The suspicion has gone abroad, affair, was evidently written at his which seems to be pretty well found- leisure, after due consideration and ed, that Harrison has become in- mature deliberation. ernment might out of graciousness be willing to grant indemnity for loss of life or property by violence, it does not recognize the principle nor concede the right to demand such indemnity by virtue of treaty stipulations. His phraseology here is more to the point and more guarded than his hasty dispatch to Gov. Nicholls, in which he virtually admitted this obligation, and which doubtless formed the base of Italy's demands. He also informs Italy that there are several questions to de determined before the question of indemnity can come up for consideration, some of which are whether these alleged Italian subjects are really Italian subjects, whether they came to this country in violation of the immigration laws, whether they were obeying the laws of this country under which they claimed protection &c., from which we take it that Mr. Blaine has been posting himself on the antecedents of the aforesaid Italian subjects, and expects to show that they were not in fact Italian subjects such as Italy should feel bound to take an interest in, but criminals, refugees from Italian justice, here in violation of law and defiers and violators of the law while here. If Rudini can see any cheerful prospect of satisfaction or in demnity in the language of this reply he can see more than any one on this side of the water can. On the whole Mr. Blaine does very well talks like a well-built, full grown American, and leaves Mr. Rudini to proceed with his diplomatic nut-

STATE TOPICS

Rocky Mount is looming up into a tobacco market of considerable importance. The papers of that town state that since August last 5,000,-000 pounds have been shipped from that point. This is somewhat remarkable, in view of the fact that tobacco culture in that section is an industry of recent growth, and has reached these proportions within a few years. It is evidently no longer all cotton in that section, something upon which the farmers are to be congratulated. But to get the full benefit of this crop, Rocky Mount and the farmers who raise the tobacco, should turn their attention to the manufacture of the leaf. If one factory be started, it will soon be followed by another, and that by a third, so on. There's money in it.

"ONCE A GOOSE."

An Unfortunate Tailor's Experience with

N. Y. Sartorial Art Journal.

A merchant tailor of New York, who has had several thrilling experiences, relates his tale of woe in the Sun of March 24th, under the above heading, as follows: "To the Editor of the Sun "Sir-Four years ago I was a merchant tailor, owned three houses and a good business. A Murray Hill dude got in my debt $260; could not get him to pay me. I advertised the bill for sale. He then sued me for $10,000 damages. I then put the bill up in my shop with a note on it-bad debt for sale-he sued me again for $5,000. The judge at court said it was libel, and an outrageous libel. My lawyer and his lawyer now own two of the houses I once owned. After I settled the cases I met the dude with a suit of my clothes on. I then licked him. Sued me for this, and for this I now have a mortgage on the other house. The only thing I ever got from this one of the Four Hundred was his measure. I have it yet. It is not for sale. My experience is this: I would sooner have a bad debt than a good lawyer. I now sell for cash.

"ONCE A GOOSE." However much he was once a "goose," it is quite evident that his resemblance to that fowl of proverbial stupidity is not now perceptible. By the way there is a great deal of wisdom in his last paragraph, so much indeed, that if changed to read: "It is better to have a bad debt than a good lawyer," it should become a familiar proverb.
