YEARS IN A VAULT.

Features Almost Perfect and Clothing Un tarnished.

There are eight bodies lying in an old vault in Greenlawn cemetery in Indianapolis, Ind., in a wonderful state of preservation. On one shelf in an ordinary pine casket lies the body of a soldier named Switzer, laid away twenty-three years ago, whose features are still as distinguishable as in life. His blue uniform is faded but little, the brass buttons are but slightly tarnished and his moustache has a long, martial sweep. His hands are tightly closed about the national colors. An iron casket incloses the remains of Mrs. A. C. Bryant, entombed more than 20 years ago. Her face still retains its original outlines, and, save the yellow discoloration, looks life-like. The white silk dress in which her form is wrapped still holds its gloss, and there is a withered bouquet of roses on her breast.

Close at hand lies Mr. Saul, placed there in 1862, and while his face has fallen away, his spotless shirt front, with its studs, and his dress suit appear as if donned yesterday.

Still another remarkable preservation is noticeable in the body of Edward Elliott, who died of excessive cigarrette smoking four years ago. His mustache still has a jaunty curl, there is a withered rose in his buttonhole, and his broadcloth dress suit and clossy shirt front bear no sign of their master's decay. The vault in which these bodies lay is of common brick, exceedingly well ventilated, and in this is supposed to be the secret of the unusual preservation of the bodies therein.

THIS IS TOO THIN.

There is in the North what is called a Tariff League, which has headquarters in New York and branches in other States. It is composed of a number of gentlemen who take a deep interest in the prosperity of the country, but especially of the various industries in which they are engaged. The prosperity of the country is so dependent upon the protection given to those industries that these gentlemen subscribe $100,000 a year or more for the purpose of educating the benighted American people up to the beauties and patriotism of protection. Nobody who knows them would ever suspect them of being actuated by selfishness or by anything but the most lovely 18-carat patriotism. Two things they have in an eminent degree-lots of "patriotism" and cheek, mainly the latter.

This Tariff League has been in existence for some time and has always taken a great deal of interest in public affairs, especially about election time when there are Presidents or members of Congress to be elected. In order that the people may be posted it spends thousands of dollars in printed articles carefully prepared showing what a grand thing protection is-for them-and how the country would go to the "demnition bowwows" if it . wasn't braced up and held together by protection, that daisy invention which has given the workmen of the countro more prosperity than they could manage, and made the farmers rich enough to carry more mortgages than any other people on the face of the earth. And for all this these disinterested Tariff Leaguers don't charge the people a cent, but give it to them as a free and voluntary offering, all they expect in return being that the people go to the polls on election day and vote for the party which invented protection, and gave these foreign manufacturers to understand that this country don't want any of their "nasty" "cheap" goods, made with then led to the other side and delivthe "pauper labor" which they have | ered the speech to the children. over there.

law who have read it in manuscript. Among the former are Revs. Dr. Benjamin Szold, of Baltimore; Rev. Dr. M. Jastrow, of Philadelphia, Ph. D., and S. Morais, LL. D., of Philadelphia, who bear testimony to its merits in its thorough treatment of the subject and to the scholarly attainments of the author in Talmudic law and lore, and the masterly ability shown in culling from many volumes of the Talmud so much scattered material, arranging and systematizing it in convenient volume, as well as comparing with the various phases of the laws of ancient and modern nations. Among the attorneys-at-law who have examined it and commended it as a work valuable not only to the legal profession but to the scholar and student of history, are Hon. Alfred M. Waddell, of this city, Hon. Isidor Rayner, of Baltimore, and Hon. Furman Sheppard, of Philadelphia, who unite in pronouncing it a work of rare excellence. The work is now in press and will shortly be issued by M. Curlander, publisher, Baltimore. It will appear in a neat octavo volume, of 270 pages, bound in cloth, price $2.50.

MINOR MENTION.

Mr. Harrison seems to have got somewhat mixed up at Omaha, Neb. He had a nice little speech prepared for the school children, but by some blunder he was led out to the platform on the side of the train, opposite to that on which the children were gathered, and without discovering the mistake delivered the speech intended for the children to their parents. When he got through the mistake was discovered. He was Afterwards he delivered another But these patriotic gentlemen are | speech in which he got mixed in a

Mr. Parnell seems to be getting to the end of his rope. His supporters have been dropping away, and the latest report is that the Harringtons and E. Dwyer Gray are becoming disaffected. Michael Davitt said a few days ago in London that Parnell could not now count on the support of more than three or four prominent men, and that he couldn't count on this long. This is not surprising. No man can defy public sentiment, and the best of public sentiment, too, in the way that Parnell has done, and retain the confidence and respect of the people, however much they may have admired and trusted him. Since the O'Shea scandal his conduct and bold, brazen defiance of public sentiment, and his effort to override it has called his sanity into question, and given ground for the belief that he was becoming mentally unbalanced. Whether this be so or not his day of usefulness and leadership is passed, and the sooner he retires to private life the better it will be for him and the country to which he has given the best efforts of his life, but which he can serve no longer, however honest or good his intent may be.

CURRENT COMMENT.

When the President talked 'circulating medium" at Omaha he intimated that he liked almost any kind of money, so it was made solid and of durable material. Those are pretty liberal sentiments. In the matter of coin Mr. Harrison is not so hard to please .- Savannah News, Dem.

"Tell me, Harry," she said, "what is the difference between protection, free trade and reciprocity?" "Certainly, darling," he responded in free, silvery tones, drawing about half an inch nearer to her, which was all there was to draw. "You see it is this way: if, for instance, we should kiss each other, that would be free trade.'

"Oo," she twittered, with a dainty little twitter.

"If" he continued, "I should kiss you and you should kiss me in return, that would be reciprocity." "Ooo, oo," she twittered, with two dainty little twitters. "And lastly," he went on, "if you should kiss me and I should take a dozen from you to pay for the privilege you enjoy, that would be protection.

"Oo, oo, oo, Harry," she twittered, in consecutive bunts of dainty little twitters, concluding with an explosive hug; "I'm in favor of protection," and the young man coincided with her unanimously.

POLITICAL POINTS.

- If Mr. Blaine does not pretty soon disclaim all pretensions to the nomination next year he will incur the serious displeasure of Russell B. Harrison. The sagacious Secretary should think of that.-N. Y. World, Dem.

- Evidently the Pension Bureau needs a thorough overhauling and reconstruction; and if the Administration be wise the job will not be delayed until a Democratic House of Representatives shall be compelled to take it in hand. Tanner is yearning for company, and let him have it.-Phil. Record, Dem.

- Mr. Blaine is a Republican, and has probably done more towards keeping the Republican party alive and respectable than any other one member of the organization; still every thinking man in the country without regard to party has heard with sincere regret of his recent illness, and that it is more serious than at first supposed .- Richmond Times, Dem.
