eyes open, and winked occasionally a very significant wink.

And then it will be remembered that when Mr. Harrison on his election tour reached San Francisco the telegrams in the newspapers announced that Lord Salisbury had been trying to get Blaine to agree with him on a joint action by this and the British Government for a closed season in Behring Sea, and that he then and there resolved to take that matter into his own hands, telegraphing to the Secretary of the Treasury to revoke the order issued granting the North American Commercial Company the privilege to continue seal-catching through the summer. Thereupon Mr. Blaine at once left Washington for New York, to see his friend, Mr. Walter Phelps, who has several fingers in the seal business, and hasn't seen Mr. Harrison since. He has got over that gout and other ailments so that it is said he can now take a two mile walk and come in as fresh as a daisy, but he is not thinking about going back to Washington for some time. It is hinted that he is in no particular hurry to meet Mr. Harrison, and that while his Assistant Secretary with the aid of Mr. Harrison is running the business of his department, he is attending to business on his own account. This is what troubles Mr. Harrison, and judging from the chat of Blaine's friends and the reports that come from Bar Harbor he has cause to be troubled.

MINOR MENTION.

The Federation of Labor is putting the Republican party managers in Washington and in Ohio on the ragged edge. They are making demands on the immigration question, and are threatening that if the demands are not complied with they will knife the Republican ticket in Ohio next fall. In February last two Swedish machinists, who had been employed in English gun factories, came to this country and presented letters of recommendation from an English official to Commodore Folger, on the strength of which he gave them employment, in the Washington navy-yard, where they are still employed. The Federation of Labor demanded their dismissal, claiming that their employment was a violation of the contract labor law. The Treasury Department referred their protest and demand to Commodore Folger who replied that he never heard of the men until they presented their letters of recommendation, that their employment was a violation of neither the letter nor the spirit of the contract labor law, that he needed such workmen and that he intended to keep them. In the meantime the Federation of Labor is kicking at the Government which professes so much interest in American workmen, employing foreign workmen when, it is claimed, an abundance of skilled labor can be got at home. The Ohio Republican platform builders straddled the immigration question, and in doing so they waked up the workmen of that State who demanded some positive utterance on that question. This straddling, and the employment of those two men by Commodore Folger are the ghosts that are now rising up to disturb the dreams of the Republican bosses.

The Department of State at Washington has refused to recognize officially or otherwise the delegation of Chilian insurgents whose mission was to use their efforts to induce this Government to recognize the insurgents as belligerents. This was in accordance with the very sensible policy heretofore pursued. It isn't a good thing for outsiders to mix up in family broils, and if this Government undertook to do that with the Republics of Central and South America it would have to add another division to the State Department for the especial purpose of receiving and hearing the pleas of insurgent delegations, and delegations on the other side, who would be constantly flocking to Washington, for it is a cold day when there isn't a revolution of some sort going on down there. When time hangs heavy on their hands and they can't find anything else to amuse them they fall back on the revolution—which they can always get up on short notice and with little preparation. In eight cases out of ten after it is all over, and a lot of them have been killed, they can't tell what the racket was about.

Messrs. Harrison, Hoar & Co. should turn their attention to the pocket borough State of Washington and inquire into that race war which is pending there. It has come to a pretty pass when negroes can't be imported into a good Republican State to take the place of white workmen without having a shooting frolic over it and a lot of the participants filled with lead. If this had occurred in some of the Southern States, what a fat theme for ex-coriating editorials it would have afforded the talented Republican editors, and what a sweet morsel it would be for Grand-pa Hoar and the other Force bill boomers if they undertook in the future to breathe life into that corpse. Little incidents of this kind go to show, if that fact were not already pretty well established, that race prejudice is not confined to the South by a long shot, and it shows further that when it comes to earning his living by honest labor the negro stands a much better showing down here than he does on the other side of the line, for down here they are never shot for seeking work.

Uncle Jerry Rusk don't know what havoc he may yet be responsible for since he struck on the process of dynamiting the clouds and bringing down rain. A couple weeks ago some fellows in Dakota exploded 100 pounds of dynamite and it has been raining all over the West ever since, and the Missouri river has got so full that it can't be persuaded to stay in its bed, but wants to get up and go over into the State of Kansas. If Uncle Jerry don't get that thing patented and reserve all rights so as to keep it out of the hands of the frolicsome or reckless rain-makers, there will be a reign of terror all over the lowlands.

STATE TOPICS.

We have frequently referred in these columns to the marble deposits of this State, which are beginning to attract attention outside of the State. The Baltimore Manufacturers' Record of last week says the Nantahala Marble and Talc Company, of Atlanta, Ga., has options on 8,000 acres of land in the lower Nantahala valley of Macon county. The Western N. C. Railroad skirts the property, the mountain on whose sides the railroad runs being a mass of marble and talc. The marble is of all colors while the talc is as white as alabaster and noted for its purity. Ten years ago it was mined in large quantities, carted 60 miles over mountain roads, to a station on the East Tennessee and Virginia railroad, and shipped to Cincinnati where it was used for making tips for gas-burners. A good many prominent citizens of Georgia have been enlisted in the enterprise, the intention being to purchase and develop the property. There is a bonanza for somebody in the marble quarries of Western North Carolina, and why can't North Carolinians as well as Georgians see it?

The cable dispatches inform us that Miss Alexandria Victoria Duff was baptized with water brought from the river Jordan. With the prospect for the number of royal scions that are coming on if they have to send to the Jordan for water every time it will prove an expensive business. They had better keep it on tap or keep a few barrels of it down in the cellar, as they do in the royal household at Berlin.

CURRENT COMMENT.

When the delegates of Mr. Harrison come marching into the national convention with streaming banners, inscribed, "Death to Rebel Clergesses," what other statesman will stand the ghost of a show for the nomination?—Louisville Courier-Journal, Dem.

The receipts at the New York Custom House during the first twenty days of June amounted to $5,493,139, against $9,348,074 during the corresponding period of last year. This is strictly in accordance with the policy of the McKinley act, which is to reduce public revenues while increasing private taxation.—Phil. Record, Dem.

The farmers have grievances, but not against the Democratic party, under whose leaders the South has been redeemed from political spoliation and misrule. The Democratic party has always been a friend to the South, and will continue to be. Southern men cannot find it in their hearts to desert this party. Rather let them rally to its support, place it in control of the Government, and then will follow a redress of their grievances and relief from onerous exactions.—Augusta Chronicle, Dem.

Nearly a whole side of a Mississippi newspaper is required for Senator George to express his voluminous views upon the Farmer's Alliance. By the time the farmers once get fairly to work asking the Senator a few pertinent questions concerning his verbose views he may begin to feel sorry that he did not compress them all into a three-line remark of a strictly non-committal character. Views sometimes make themselves very disagreeable.—Savannah News, Dem.

A PREACHER-LIKE MAN, But He Had Nerve and was Handy with His "Weapons."

Washington Star. One of the most interesting of historical duels took place in the summer of 1833. A young gentleman of Natchez, newly wed, was on his bridal trip. He had been to New York collecting bills for Natchez merchants and was spotted by a gang of sharpers. With his wife he took the steamer Orleans, of the Diamond Jo line, at Pittsburgh, and between that city and Louisville he was invited into a game of 20-card poker—an interesting variation upon the usual sport, which involves only the ten-spots and cards above that denomination. It so happened that he was not only what cash of his own he had with him, but also many thousands of dollars with which he was entrusted. In his despair he tried to jump overboard, but was restrained by a preacher-like man who had come on board at the last landing.

Now it chanced that this preacher-like man asked for a drink at the bar, and in paying for it gave a $100 bill from what seemed to be a well-stuffed wallet. The gamblers who had won the young man's money thought that another pigeon was at hand to pluck. They asked him if he would join them in a little game, and he said yes. At first it struck the stranger that the ante, $5, was a little high considering the fact that there was no limit, but he kept on and did not murmur when he found himself $500 out of pocket. He put up a blind and the man at his left—only three of them were playing—straddled it with $10. To make it good he had to add $15, but that was only the beginning. First one of his opponents raised and then the other until there was an enormous sum in the pot. He himself had four kings and a ten-spot. Presently they both "called," and he saw the dealer slip a card to the player who had made the straddle. Like a flash the preacher-like man drew a murderous-looking knife and said quietly, but firmly, to the gentleman at his left:

STATE TOPICS.

"If you lay down your hand and six cards are found in it I will kill you!"

The third man who had dealt, showed a full hand and the preacher-like stranger swept all the money on the table into his hat. Of course there was a row immediately, and the gambler who had been threatened at once challenged the winner to fight him. The latter assented, asking merely five minutes for preparation. He used the time in conveying the cash, which amounted to nearly $100,000, to the wife of the youth whom the sharpers had defrauded, saying as he delivered to her the amount: "If I don't come back two thirds of this belongs to you and the other third to me." Then he went out on deck and friends quickly arranged the duel which was to take place. The two men were placed opposite one another on the two wheel-houses of the steamboat, and were told to fire at the word. They did so, and the gambler, shot through the body, fell into the river. His adversary sought the young woman into whose hands he had delivered the money and reclaimed the third part, which represented his stake in the game. The remaining two-thirds he gave her, saying merely that it represented the sum of which her husband had been robbed. In fact it was within $100 of what he had lost. Her gratitude and his may well be imagined, but it was only with some difficulty that they persuaded him to admit that his name was James Bowie. The preacher-like man was none other than the famous inventor of the bowie knife—recognized at that time as the most formidable fighter with any weapon known, in that age of desperate heroism. This would seem like a fancy sketch, save for the fact that it is an historic incident.

A MODERN DRUMMER.

He Finds the Telegraph Useful in Communicating With His Wives. Chicago Mail.

"No one who has been a telegraph operator in a large hotel doubts the entire truthfulness of the old saying that all men are liars," he remarked, as he finished sending a dispatch and added the receiver's check to it. "I wish you could see the sort of business that goes over my wire here day after day. It is enough to establish beyond doubt the theory of the total depravity of man.

"Last summer a drummer stayed at this hotel for a couple of months and every morning he received a dispatch every night in which he gave a complete account of his doings during the day. After this telegraphic bombardment had been kept up for three or four weeks the fellow came into the office here one morning and handed me a $20 bill. 'I'm going up to Waukesha for a week,' said he, 'and I want you to look after my business here. You understand about how my affairs have been running, I guess, and you can handle them just as well without me for a few days. Remember, I am hard at work here. Don't let me stay out too late at night, you know, or do anything that a sober, industrious and devoted husband ought not to do.'

"Well, I became that Rochester woman's husband by proxy. Every morning I received a dispatch from her, and every evening I answered it. I sent the truant husband to church twice on Sunday and permitted him to go to the theatre twice during the week. Upon his return from Waukesha he began sending amatory dispatches to a woman at that point. One morning he handed in a dispatch to be sent in duplicate to his wife in Rochester and to a woman in Cincinnati. I noticed that the message ended, 'Your own loving husband, Bert,' and immediately called his attention to the slip. 'Do you want the word "husband" to go to Cincinnati also?' I asked. 'Oh, yes,' he replied, as he lighted a cigar, 'make it a double-header. If my last week's work pans out well, I'll soon give you a chance to save a little work by sending triple-headers.'
