FLORIDA'S VOLCANO.

The Mystery of Pinhook Swamp That Nobody Has Yet Unravelled.

Messrs. Castleman and Barbour, who, with Mr. Staley as guide, went down into the Pinhook swamp to ferret out Florida's mysterious volcano, have returned like thousands of others, without the volcano.

We understand that Messrs. Castleman and Barbour have not entirely given up the exploration, but will equip themselves better for the work and try it again at a later day.

For more than half a century this mysterious column of smoke by day and a flame by night, rising in the midst of an impenetrable swamp on the Gulf coast, has not only puzzled the rustic fishermen and hunters who watch it from the outer edges of the swamp, but scientists and thousands of others who have viewed it from elevated points about Tallahassee, thirty miles away.

By day it presents the appearance of a vast volume of jet black smoke rising up as though issuing from a huge smokestack, ascending high above the tree-tops and floating off on the breezes.

It appears and disappears at irregular intervals, but always in the same place. From Tallahassee it is south-south-east, and when burning can be plainly seen from any elevated position.

Numerous expeditions have started out with sanguine expectations, but came back worn out and disgusted. They can get all around the mystery, and see it from any elevated standpoint, but when they start into the swamp, which is from fifteen to thirty miles across in any direction, they are met by insurmountable barriers, besides snakes, alligators, mosquitoes and sand flies.

It is hard to believe that a decent, respectable volcano would hide itself away in such an unglorious place as this, but there is the smoke and flame, and if it is not a volcano, what is it? During the late war the Federal gunboats lying out in the Gulf of St. Marks mistook the smoke for a Confederate blockade-runner hidden behind the swamps; by some private channel, and wasted lots of valuable ammunition shelling that dismal swamp.

A BIG GAME OF POKER.

In Which the Chips Represented Steers Instead of Money.

"The game began at Texarkana," said a Pittsburger, who occasionally drops into poker, to a Dispatch reporter, "the oddest and one of the biggest poker games ever yet played."

It was early in the fall of last year when four rascals, who own between them thousands of acres and tens of thousands of cattle in Texas, met at the terminus of the Iron Mountain road.

They were bound for Chicago, where they intended to sell their cattle, and, as the wealthiest cattlemen of the great Southwest often do, they preferred to make the journey in the caboose of a stock train.

The game was not peculiar in itself; it was carried on in the free-and-easy but business-like way that obtains in the West, but the value of the chips was stated in unusual terms, a red chip standing for five steers and a blue chip for ten steers.

The tolerably large herd of cattle was upon the dry goods box which served for a table at every deal and one jackpot contained no less than 300 head of cattle.

From Texarkana to St. Louis the player's luck was about even, although hundreds of hands were played in that time.

When they struck the Atlantic and entered the home stretch for Chicago the contest grew fiercer, and at about every third hand the betting ran high.

Luck turned in one of the player's favor—the man who had least luck, by the way—and when the multiplying lights on the prairie showed that the train was nearing Chicago the game ended.

The other three men had lost every chip they had, had borrowed again and again with the same result, and when the winner counted up he found he had won 40,000 head of cattle belonging to the other three men in the game, or in close upon $250,000.

It grieves one's sympathetic soul to learn that the Emperor of China is very fond of oysters, and never an "r" in the whole Chinese alphabet.

Henry sobbed his fiancée, "I heard that you firmed in the mountains with some other girls."

She (hesitatingly)—"This is very sudden, Mr.—er—Smith, is it not? We only met last night, and—"

He—but reflect, I've only a week to stay here, and there are forty other girls at the hotel and about two men.—Judge.
