SUGAR BURNED AS FUEL.

The Furnaces Ate Up Nearly All Else Movable and the Cargo Had to Follow. Philadelphia Record.

The British steamship Dunedin, which sailed from Cienfuegos on October 3d for New York or Philadelphia, with a cargo of sugar, has been forced to put into Newport for fuel, having been compelled to burn part of her cargo to enable her to reach a coaling station.

The heavy gales, which detained the vessel several days beyond her usual passage time, consumed all of the surplus fuel which is generally taken on board beyond the usual allowance.

Captain McKeechie found that by doing his best fuel would be gone in two days before his vessel would reach Newport News, the nearest port, and he gave orders to burn every available thing on deck to make steam.

Ten barrels of crude petroleum were thrown in the furnaces, and on top of this was thrown deck fittings, cabin doors and all loose stuff below decks, but even then the land was not in sight, so far as the eye could reach, and the storm was still blowing with great fury.

Captain McKeechie then gave orders to begin on the cargo and bag after bag of sugar was thrown into the furnaces, until six tons of the raw sugar was used in the furnaces.

Sugar, to the surprise of all, burned as well as the coal and gave out equally as much heat.
