It is said that Philadelphia is the great peanut market of this country. Perhaps that accounts for her soporific tendencies.

In Holland the railroad companies employ women to watch the railroad crossings, and it is said no accidents ever happen at those crossings.

Mr. Disston, manufacturer, of Philadelphia, is a clever sort of a geutleman. He presented his workmen with 1,500 nice dressed turkeys Christmas morning.

The armor that Christopher Columbus wore has been found in a Museum at Madrid. If there is any thing else that Columbus had or didn't have, which is wanted at the Chicago fair, it will be discovered.

Irishmen are finding other occupations that suit them better now than acting British soldier. In 1860 there were 60,000 Irishmen in the British army; now there are but 27,-786, and that is 27,786 too many.

Since June last the shipments of grain from this country to Europe were nearly three times as great as for the corresponding period last year. This has helped the farmers very much to stand up under the McKinley tariff.

A Memphis coroner who recently found that a man he was called to pronounce upon died from "heart failure," accidently discovered shortly afterwards that the "heart failure" was precipitated by a big bowieknife in the hands of another man.
