THE ECONOMY OF GOOD ROADS

There is not a State in this Union that does not take more or less interest in railroads and give them more o. less encouragement, while there is not a State in the Union that takes half as much interest in country roads or pays half the attention to them that it should. There is not a State in the Union, as far as we know, that has a road system at all, or anything that might be called a road system.

We are told that the State of Virginia had, before the days of railroads, some of the best public highways in this country, and that they wound through the mountains in such a way, by such excellent grades, that a person riding in the stage coaches of those days would scarcely realize that he was ascending or descending a mountain. We have travelled over some of these same roads since, and saw but few traces of the fine engineering skill that made these mountain roads the admiration of the traveller.

It we had never had any railroads | that would be a credit to us. we would doubtless by this time have a fine system of turnpikes, at least in the older States, for their necessity would have been recognized; but the railroads have so overshadowed the "dirt" road that it has been almost forgotten by the States and been left to the counties and the townships to be patched up and kept in shape the best they can, which lacks very little of being as bad as possi-

There is not a leading nation in Europe that hasn't roads that should make this country ashamed of itself, roads that a pair of stout dogs will pull a heavier load over than a pair of horses would over the average American road much of the year.

It would be hardly fair to institute a compairson between this country and the leading countries of Europe and expect to have as good roads here as they have there, because their roads are the work of ages and they are simply keeping up systems some of which were established centuries ago. This is true, but there the Government looks after the roads as a matter of public policy and public economy while our Governments do not, but let the roads take care of themselves. That's the difference.

But State Legislatures will never give a question like this serious attention until prodded up to it by the people, and, strange to say, the very and boards himself by depredating on people, the farmers, who are most di- people who can't stay up nights with rectly interested in good roads, are the people who seem to realize this the least, and to say the least about it. They would probably be the first to protest if it were proposed to tax their property to construct good, substantial and durable highways. There is a political party which has sprung up within the past few years which claims to be the especial champion of the farmer, and as such appeals to the farmers of the country for their support and votes. That many of the farmers so regard it is shown by the fact that it polled at the last election 1,037,060 votes, the large majority of which were cast by are good, useful and valuable dogs. farmers.

the dog is one of the institutions that stands on its "rights" and will not be suppressed without being heard. It claims not only all the rights acstitution in this country but more, for it scorns to pay taxes when the hog, steer, sheep, cow, mule, horse, &c., have to trot up and report to the tax lister. But the dog never does. He is a sovereign who doesn't care a continental for the tax lister and devotes his days and nights, when not out on freebooting expeditions, to having a good, easy time.

The Senator who thought "the owners of dogs had some rights" may be a humorist. We don't know whether he is or not, but we do know that the owner of the dog hasn't half as many "rights" as the dog, for if he went out and did the owner who thinks enough of him to > The Senatorial question in California was settled Tuesday by the election of Stephen M. White, Democrat, of Los Angeles. He has the reputation of being one of the ablest men in public life on the Pacific slope, and a Democrat of the first order. This adds one to the Democratic column of Senators and takes one from the Republican column, and makes it impossible for the Republicans to hold a majority. They can't elect a Republican from Kansas although they are making a desperate attempt to get control of the Legislature, for the Democrats have the balance of power, however, the contest may be decided between the Republicans and Populists, and they will not be very apt to help in the election of a Republican. There is a greater probability that there will be such an understanding between the Democrats and Populists as will result in the election of a Democrat or a Populist.
