HOW IT IS PANNING OUT.

There are a great many people in this country who never took any stock in the reciprocity which forms the caudal appendage to the Mc-Kinley tariff. They regarded it as a cheat, a trick to humbug the people and reconcile them to the Mc-Kinley style of protection, of which they were showing signs of becoming tired.

Mr. Blaine was shrewd. He was looking forward to the Presidency himself and he knew that if the Mc-Kinley tariff didn't have something in it to offset its odious features it would defeat the party which endorsed it, and hence he labored with might and main to have his reciprocity scheme made a part of that tariff. He had hard work to do it. He had to fight McKinley and Tom Reed and other Republican leaders who had Presidential aspirations and didn't want to give Blaine the prestige that this reciprocity programme would give him, for they anticipated that his friends would use it and claim for him the credit of any success that might attend it.

They finally tacked it on to the bill, not just as he wanted it but something after the fashion he had planned, with some amendments that put it in the power of Mr. Harrison to contribute to its success or defeat as he might desire; to its success if it was helping the party, to its defeat if it was doing too much for Blaine.

The Democrats in Congress op posed it as they opposed the McKinley tariff, not because they were opposed to reciprocity, the right sort of reciprocity, but because it was a sham and a delusion, which lacked the essential spirit of reciprocity and was corner-stoned on intimidation and force, giving the President the arbitrary power to levy import duties on the products of countries that couldn't see this Republican political scheme in the same light that its fabricators saw it. Its Democratic opponents pronounced it a sham and predicted that it would prove a failure. It has justified their characterization and verified their predictions The reciprocity organs exultingly claim that the increase of our exports to those countries with which reciprocity treaties have been formed is a direct result of this reciprocity and point to the figures showing an increase of about $7,000,000 in exports in the first year, but they make no note of the increase of imports from those same countries.

One of them, Brazil, which was the first to fall in under this reciprocity act, shows a considerable difference between exports to the United States and imports from the United States. In twenty months our imports from that country increased from $111,227,963 to $204,-814,624. In the same period the exports increased from $20,936,097 to $22,380,106, a gain of $1,444,009 in exports as compared with an increase of $93,586,661 in imports, a pretty considerable balance in favor of Brazil. We have not the figures for the other countries but the probabilities are that they would show has made him no less.

about the same proportion between the exports to this country and the imports from it. So far as reciprocity goes it is decidedly to the advantage of some of those countries whose trade it was alleged it would command, the countries of Central and South America. Those which have made treaties have profited very much by it, while we have profited very little. Their exports to this country have increased very largely, but their imports from this country very little, which may be accounted for in this way. They have for a long time been doing most of their buying from European countries, which sold them goods cheaper than they could buy them from American manufacturers. When reciprocity was adopted by the tariff advocates in this country, th European manufacturers, not to be overmatched in markets of which they had long had almost absolute control, reduced the prices of their goods still lower, and kept them be low the American figures, which they could do because they had the ad vantage of raw materials, whilst American manufacturers were compelled, under the McKinley tariff, to pay heavy duties on the raw materials which they used.

This was where the European especially the English manufacturers had the advantage of their American competitors. Then the Centra American and South American mer chants who were exporting their goods to this country in large quantities took the money they got for them and bought the goods they wanted from the European manufacturers from whom they had been buying before, because they got them cheaper than they could buy them from our manufacturers. Thus they made money on their exports, and got their European imports cheaper than they got them before, so they made in two ways, on the increased quantity of what they sold and in he lower prices of what they bought.

If reciprocity had been coupled with free raw materials then our manufacturers might have entered those fields fully equipped to compete with their European competitors, and reciprocity might have panned out something better than i has and not prove a mere sham and a delusion, which it is and must be while handicapped as it is by the McKinley tariff.

THOMAS M. HOLT.

In retiring from the office of Governor, which he held for two years with credit to himself and to the State, Thomas M. Holt carries with him the esteem of all our people, regardless of politics. He was confronted by conditions that very few of our Governors have had to contend against, but he carried himself with dignity and stern devotion to principle, and his conceptions of duty that commanded the respect of even those who fought him most bitterly.

We refer to the organization of the Alliance division within the lines of the Democratic party, and to the Third party organization, afterwards outside of those lines, but composed in a large part of men who had for years affiliated with the Democratic party, and unswervingly supported its nominees and State ad ministrations. The former of these fought Governor Holt's re-nomination and defeated it; the latter warred on him and on his administration. But the opposition of one nor the hostility of the other swerved him neither to the right nor to the left, for he kept on in the straight way where honor and duty led.

In his administration of the State's affairs he had the advantage of having had a fine business training, having been for many years personally and largely identified with number of the State's most important industries. His large interest in and official connection with the North Carolina Railroad for years as Director or President familiarized him with the railroad operations of the State; his long experience as a cotton manufacturer familiarized him with that industry, while as a a farmer both in the extent of his operations, and in his success he was second to no man in the State. He was identified also with other industries. He was eminently a practical man, with a business training which served him well as Governor. Personally he was plain and unpretending, and as Governor, al though fully appreciative of the dignity of the office, he was the same affable, unpretentious "Tom" Holt that he was in his younger days when he in person directed the business of his factories and farms, and held himself above no honest man. He was not only politically but socially a Democrat, asked to be esteemed only for what he was, and basked in no other man's fame or glory. Having been Governor made him no greater than he was, ceasing to be Governor

MINOR MENTION.

The impression has heretofore obtained that cold weather killed out the cholera germ, and we have therefore been congratulating ourselves that the intensely cold weather which has prevailed for some weeks throughout this country and Europe might mean exemption from cholera scourge next Spring. But the announcement comes from Germany of cholera ravages in a lunatic asylum, and of many deaths, which shows that the disease may do its fatal work even in the coldest weather. There is not much doubt that the extreme cold will have a tendency to check it, and to lessen the scourge if it should appear, but the fact that it still exists in Germany, and doubtless in other countries, shows the necessity of taking timely precautions, by taking sanitary measures, and thus putting our exposed cities in the best possible condition to face that or other conagious diseases.

The people of Burlington, Alanance county, are very much interested in the proposed Burlington & South Western Railroad, for which a charter has been asked from this Legislature. It is proposed to run into the Chatham coal fields and make connection with the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley road, which will give the people of Burlington and that section a shorter route to Wilmington, which they regard as a matter of a good deal of importance to them, in giving them another shipping port for their manufactured goods and cotton. This is one of the strong points urged for its construction. The propsed line will run through a rich section which will be hrown open for improvement and development, thus adding to wealth of

CURRENT COMMENT.

- The Cleveland Plain Dealer says that "G neral Mahone is said to wear $3 stockings; yet no man would like to stand in his shoes." Correct, and there is many a man who cannot afford a twenty-five cent pair of socks who occupies a far more enviable position among his fellowmen than the little Radical ex-boss .-Philadelphia Times, Dem.

--- Lowell, Massachusetts, cov ered itself with disgrace on Sunday In times gone by there have been at old Huntington Hall many turbulent scenes when General Buttler ap peared there to speak, but none sur passed the outrageous conduct of the rabble who surged through the building to view his remains. They overpowered the police, smashed doors and windows, and profaned the presence of death with yelling and fighting. It was not a desire to do reverence to the dead soldier and statesman that led people of this calibre to Huntington Hall on Sunday, but morbid curiosity alone .-Philadephia Ledger, Ind.

He says they tasted first rate. — Mr. Joseph A Parker, and old railroader, died at his home in Lauriuburg, this week. He was formerly Master of Transpotation of the Wilmington and Weldon railzoad, but of late years had been a railroad conductor.

His death was caused by pneumonia. - Winston Sentinel: Lemuel Eugene Nicely, the Southern Express Company's agent here who left town so nysteriously on Sunday afternoon, January 8th, is still at large. A warrant has been issued and a reward of $150 has been offered by the Express Company for his arrest. His shortage is placed at $3,000. Nicely left the office safe, which contained over $4,000 with other valuables, open. A portion of Nicely's shortage is accredited to his giving out express packages to various parties in town.

- Greensboro Record: A lot of Revenue officials from this place went up to Wilkes county last week and made one of tha biggest hauls for two day's work ever recorded in the annals of raiding, at least in this part of the country. Thirteen distilleries in fall blast were captured, with 8 copper stills and 13,000 gallons of beer, but if they caught any of the men engaged in the nefarious business we have yet to hear of it, Such violaters of the law are becoming experts and it is difficult to bag such game.

He adds that a party of four gentlemen with a sled and 600 pounds of baggage crossed the sound on the 16th from Edenton to Raper, a distance of eight miles.

- Salisbury Herald: Mr. W. C Fraley, who visited the Yadkin river at the "Point" yesterday, says the spectacle is a grand one and is well worth going to see. South river here empties Into the larger stream and the two are frozen over at and above the point of intersection. Ice commenced to form on the smaller stream first and as it floated down into the Yadkin it commenced to accumulate in the still water at the "Point" and an ice gorge has been formed. It is piled up in all conceivable shapes and in some places is fully four feet in thickness. Nothing like it has been seen in the past sixty years, and the oldest citizens are going daily to look, admire and wonder.

- Newbern Journal: All previous ecords on the foundation of ice around Newbern are broken. Four men skated across Neuse river yesterday at its junction with Trent river-a feat never per formed before. They were Messrs. Geo and Ed. Clark, John Sullivan and Chas Hall. In 1857 the Neuse was crossed on the ice, but it was a little nigher up and men who did it went slowly and tested the ice ahead of them with long poles. The ice appeared yesterday as thick in the center of the river as near the shore. The opinion was expressed that to-day the river could be crossed anywhere, and that skating could be carried on down it for many miles-possi bly clear to its mouth.
