WOOLLEN GOODS PRICES. What a Chicago Manufacturer Thinks

the Outlook. Howard N. Wagg, of the Wagg-Anderson Woollen Co., Chicago, expresses his views as follows through the N. Y.

"So far as prices of woollen goods are concerned, a marked drop need not be expected just because the new tariff has gone into effect. Prices of domestics were regulated in anticipation of the change, and the reductions were practically made before the first of the year.

The reduction of duty is forty-four cents per pound, which will make the | blackboard would cost $3.00, and the cost of Spring goods about fifty cents less and Winter goods from sixty-five to seventy cents per yard less than they have been heretofore. The general outlook is better for the tariff being settled, and people will feel more like buying, with the belief that there will be no change in legislation on that matter for a few years at least. Still, there will never again be carried such large stocks as were carried two years ago, and prior to that time. Merchants have had their lesson, and they will not need to have it repeated. They will buy closer to their immediate needs and buy oftener, paying closer attentions to their credits and collections.

None of these things is to be regretted, except the method of instruction, which was pretty severe for a time. Everything looks hopeful now for a fairly good year of steady increase.

victorious party is expected to increase as the session grows. The day was an uninteresting one in the Senate. It was devoted to the introduction and passage of bills of minor mportance. COTTON ACREAGE THIS YEAR. What Will the Planters Dor-Only the

Certainty of a Smaller Crop This Year Will Advance Prices-United Action Is

With the advent of the new year, says the New Orleans Picayune, the future of the cotton industry assumes the position of the most important matter before the people of the Southern States. As a result of the enormous crop of 1804, coupled with the depression existing in all branches of trade, cotton has so depreciated in value that the price is now generally admitted to be considerably below the cost of production. Such being the case, the policy to be pursued with respect to the next crop becomes a serious problem, which must receive a solution within the next few months.

It is clear that whatever remedies are esorted to to correct the existing abnormal conditions, united action on the part of the cotton growers is necessary If curtailment of acreage is agreed upon as the proper remedy, the reduction must be uniform throughout the cotton States. The same may be said of all other expedients that may suggest

With a view to securing this united action, a convention of the cotton growers is to be held shortly in Jackson, Miss., to which delegates from all the cotton-growing States are invited. Yesterday the Cotton Factors' Association of this city decided to send representatives to this convention, and they also adopted a sort of memorial to be presented. In this memorial the reduction of acreage is pointed to as the only efficacious remedy which can be adopted to restore profitable prices and again place the cotton industry on a healthy basis. It is pointed out that foreign spinners are confidently counting on another large crop this year, and Liverpool is actually selling cotton to arrive during the next season at a figure equivalent to 41/2c on plantations. It is shown that the cotton growers have the remedy in their own hands, and that remedy is the systematic reduction of the acreage all over the South. The factors have also evolved a plan of organization for a national cottongrowers' association, which will be proposed at the Jackson convention. The scheme contemplates State and county branches of this national association, and all members are to be bound to reduce the cotton acreage a certain percentage, the executive comnittee in each county to have the power to destroy all cotton planted in excess of the percentage of acreage agreed upon. There can be no question but that the eduction of the cotton acreage is the proper policy to be pursued at the present time. Only the certainty of a smaller crop next year can give a permanent upward tendency to prices, and the sooner the cotton growers make up their minds to this the better, In order that the reduction in acreage can be made effective, it is necessary that it should be general and that no one may suffer an injustice the reduction should also be uniform. While the Picavune is fully persuaded of the wisdom of reducing the acreage during 1895, the policy of crop diversi fication should not be lost sight of. The only permanent solution of the cotton problem must be found in crop diversification and the production of all supplies at home. While advocating the reducing of acreage, therefore, it would be as well to urge, at the same time, the general production at home of food supplies hitherto purchased abroad and added to the cost of producing the Mr. Ewart (Rep.) of Henderson, stated staple crop. THE MAILS.
