Robert Mantell as "Monbars" Monday

The coming of Robert Mantell at the Opera House next Monday evening, the 18:h, presenting his greatest play of "Monbars," is one of the greatest events of the present theatrical sesson. This will be Mr. Mantell's first appearance before a Wilmington audience, but he is by no means a new-comer to the American stage, having won laurels on both continents and in the great play which he will present here.

The following is clipped from the St. Louis, Mo., Republican, of recent date : Robert Manteil began a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House ast evening. He appeared in the character in which he has become famous and justly so, Monbars. Of his acting nothing new can be said. It is the same cholarly finished personation of a strong character by a magnetic man that was admired by hundreds of St. Louisans ast season. The audience that greeted him was remarkable in numbers and in culture, and they be stowed their favor ich careful d's rimination. The scene in the first act, where Monbars rescues the young lady and cauterizes the wound on his arm with a red-hot iron, was ad-

The scenes in the House to-day while speeches were being made by Republicans on points of personal privilege denouncing the Caucasian were the most sensational which have characterized this session of the Legislature. Excitement reigned and there was posson in the air. A number of speeches were made denouncing the article-all by Republicans-and Mr. Bagwell, Populist, threw an additional firebrand into the arena by saying if the six per cent. interest bill was not passed, the election law would not be allowed to go through. This aroused the Republicans to greater indignation. Mr. Butler was the target of many Republican darts, and Mr. Petree denounced the article as unjust | Save Something Every Week. and ungentlemanly. Mr. Smith, of Bladen, spoke of the editor of the Cauasian as "self-constituted Czar." Mr. Cex, of Pitt, said the article was dictatorial advice which he repudiated and hurled back with indignation.
