expect no material change for some years to come, for the simple reason that as the parties are now constituted and as they now are and will be represented in the national legislature for some years to come, the differences on that question are too radical to admit of a half way ground upon which they might come together and agree.

The next House of Representatives will be Republican by a majority which may be troublesome to the Republicans on account of its number. Against this Republican House will be a Senate in which the majority will be anti-Republican and can defeat any legislation proposed by the House, which makes the prospective situation, as far as the two Houses of Congress are concerned, identical with that of the past Congress, with the exception that a Republican majority takes the place of the Democratic majority in the House. Besides this there is a President at the other end of the avenue who is not likely to be in accord with either the House or Senate on this question, so that there is little probability of any financial legislation for two years an yway. To affect any material change in the financial policy a revolution in politics will be necessary and such a revolution as it would be entirely unreasonable to expect any time in the near future, much less at the end of two years, for there is no probability of the Republicans recovering possession of the Senate for some years even if they should elect the next President and hold possession of the House for two or more terms. But if they were to elect the President and had a House and Senate in accord with him in the financial policy it would remain substantially as it is, for the present policy is of their invention and they are proud of it.

There is but one solution of the problem that we can see, under the conditions which prevail now and will continue to prevail while a few Eastern States can outvote in Congress four times their number of Western States, and that is an international monetary congress to consider and devise a plan for the restoration of silver as a money metal. But there is little probability of any agreement being reached there, if such a congress should be called.

in the world than those who are deficient in such qualities. It is the selfish man who is the keenest to detect selfishness in others: it is the overbearing who complain most of the arrogance and pride with which they are met, and the unjust who murmur at the injustice they receive. On the other hand, the loving and sympathetic discover love and sympathy everywhere; the noble and true bring to light nobility and truth which might otherwise be hidden. Thus to a large extent we develop the character of those we meet. By a subtle magnetism we draw like to like and evolve out of other personalities the characteristics of our own. Even the outward circumstances of life are largely what we ourselves make them. We are accustomed to consider prosperity a blessing and adversity a curse, but quite frequently they change places. It is the spirit in which they are recreation that invigorates one enfeebles another. The same sorrow that softens one and leads him out of self to works of kindness and helpfulness prostrates another and renders him valueless. It is that which is within a man that so acts upon the externals of life as to decide their results to him, and through him to others. If this be so, then happiness or wretchedness is largely in our power, and most of our complaints only bear witness to our own remissness. We may rightly recognize the futility of struggling against outward events which we cannot control, but we can always bring to bear upon them such a spirit and influence as shall turn evil into good and bitter into sweet. -Philadelphia Ledger.

Metatarsalgia.

Metatarsalgia, or fourth toe disease, has been the subject of much scientific discussion. Many patients have been operated on, the operation consisting of the removal of a portion of the bone of the toe, which had become highly inflamed. A new form of treatment is that of shaping the shoe that the weight will not come directly upon the ball of the foot, but slightly back of the ball, and this is secured by making the ankle and instep close fitting and the toe and ball very broad and easy. One physician advises that a depression be made in the sole of the shoe just beneath the fourth toe, so that there shall be no pressure from any direction. This works well in some cases, but in others the blood. "-Cincinnati Enquirer. surgical remedy is the only successful
