The Morning Star.

AS WE USED TO LONG AGO. Play that you are mother, dear, And play that papa is your beau; Play that we sit in the corner here, Just as we used to long ago; Play so, we lovers two, Are just as happy as can be,
And I'll say, "I love you!" to you,
And you say, "I love you!" to me!
"I love you!" we both shall say,
All in earnest and all in play.

Or, play that you are the other one
That sometimes came and went away,
And play that the light of years agone
Stole into my heart again today! Playing that you are the one I knew In the days that never again may be, I'll say, "I love you!" to you,
And you say, "I love you!" to me!
"I love you!" my heart will say
To the ghost of the past come back today.

Or, play that you sought this nestling place For your own sweet self, with that dua guise
Of your pretty mother in your face
And the look of that other in your eyes!
So the dear old love shall live anew,
As I hold my darling on my knee,
And I'll say, "I love you!" to you,
And you'll say, "I love you!" to me!
Oh, many a strange, true thing we say
And do when we pretend to play!

THE LIAR.

I never loved but one woman. I passed five years with her in perfect happiness. I can truly say that to her I owe my success, because of my freedom from care and because she imbued me with some of her great ambition. From the first moment we met it seemed to me that I had always loved her. Her beauty and character answered all my dreams. That woman never left me. She died in my house, in my arms and still loving me. But when I think of her it drives me mad. If I attempt to describe her as she was during the five years, in all the glory of her love, with her tall, svelte figure, her clear cut features, like an oriental Jew's, her luminous, pale face, her cheerful talk, her voice soft and sweet as her glance; if I try to bring again to my mind that vision of delight, it is only to say—I hate her!

Her name was Clotilde. In the house in which I first met her she was known as Mme. Deloche, the widow of a captain long since dead. She appeared to have traveled extensively. In her conversation she would sometimes say, "When I was at Tampico," or, perhaps, "Once during a raid in Valparaiso." Aside from these remarks nothing in her manner, in her language, suggested a nomadic life-nothing of that disorder and hurry incident to quick departures or untimely arrivals. She was a Parisian, dressed always with exquisite taste, without a burnoose or those eccentric serapes by which one recognizes the wives of officers and marines who are perpetually on the move. When I found that I loved her, my only idea was to ask her hand in marriage. A friend spoke to her for me. She replied simply that she should never marry. Thenceforth I avoided places where I would see her, and as I was too nnhappy to work I resolved to go away. I was making preparations for departure, when, one morning, in the midst of the confusion of packing, Mme. Deloche entered my apartment.

"Why do you go away?" she asked. 'Because you love me? I also love you, only"-here her voice trembled a little -"only I am married." And she told me her history. It was a story of love and desertion. Her husband was dissipated. He had beaten her. They separated at the end of three years. Her family, of whom she seemed very proud, occupied high positions in Paris, but since her marriage they had disowned her. She was a niece of the grand rabbi. Her sister, widow of an officer of high rank, had married for a second husband the general of the guard at St. Germain. As for herself, financially ruined by her husband, she had fortunately been highly educated and possessed several accomplishments, of which she now made use. She gave lessons in music in the wealthy families of the Chausee d'Antin and the Faubourg St. Germain. Her story was touching, but quite long, full of the pretty repetitions and interminable incidents which crowd the talk of women. I hired a pretty little house in the Avenue de l'Imperatrice. I passed the first year listening to her. looking at her, without thinking of work. It was she who first urged me to enter my studio and fixed me with ambition to become a great artist. I could not induce her to give up her pupils. This independence touched me deeply. I admired the proud soul which made me feel a little humiliated before the expressed wish to owe nothing except to her own exertions. We were thus separated every day. With what happiness I returned home, so impatient when she was late, so happy when I found her there before From her pupils in Paris she brought me rare flowers. I often forced her to accept some present, but she laughingly said that she was richer than I, and the lessons must have been very profitable, for she always dressed with great elegance and always in black, which she wore through coquetry on account of her complexion. Her beauty was enhanced by heavy velvets, shining jets, lustrous satins and masses of silky laces. All her pupils, daughters of bankers and financiers, adored and respected her, and more than once she showed me a bracelet, a bangle or a piece of lace which one of them had Except when at work, we were never separated. Only on Sunday she went to St. Germain to see her sister, the wife of the general, with whom, long ago, she had made her peace. I accompanied her to the station. She returned the same evening, and often, when the days were long, we would make a rendezvous and go to row on the water or for a walk in the woods. She would tell me about her visit, how pretty the children were and how happy they all were together. It seemed to make her so unhappy that I redoubled my tenderness in order to make her forget her sorrow. What happy times of work and confidence we had! I suspected nothing. Everything she said appeared so true, so natural. I could reproach her with only one thing-sometimes, in telling me about the families to which her pupils belonged, she gave a quantity of intimate details and told of imaginary intrigues. She saw always the romance around her and seemed to live in dramatic combinations. These dreams tronbled my happiness. I, who wished to fly far from the rest of the world to live alone with her, often found her occupied with indifferent things. But I could pardon these dreams in a woman young and unhappy, whose life had been a sad romance, without hope of a happy denovement. Once only I became suspicious, or, rather, uneasy. One Sunday evening she did not return. I was in despair. What should I do? Go to St. Germain? I could not do that without compromising her. However, after a fearful night, I had just decided to go there when she arrived, pale and troubled. Her sister was ill; she had remained to care for her. I believed what she told me, not suspecting the flow of words which met the least questioning. Two or three times, in the same week, she returned to spend the night; finally, the sister having recovered, she again took up her regular and tranquil life.

Unhannily, some time afterward, it was her turn to fall ill. One day she came home from giving lessons, trem-bling, weak, feverish. Inflammation of the lungs declared itself, becam more serious, and soon—the doctor told me-irremediable. I was crazed with grief. Then I thought that I would make her last hours happy. Her family, which she loved so much, of which she was so proud, I would bring to her bedside. Without saying anything to her, I wrote first to her sister at St. Germain and went myself to the grand rabbi, her uncle. When I arrived at his house, I was ushered into an antechamber, and soon the grand rabbi came to receive me.

"There are moments, sir," I began 'when hatred ought to be forgotten." He looked at me in astonishment. I went on:

"Your niece is dying!" "My niece! I have no niece! You are mistaken. "I beg of you, sir, to forget that foolish quarrel. I speak of Mme. Deloche, the wife of Captain"-"I do not know Mme. Deloche. You are mistaken, my child, I assure you." And kindly he pushed me toward the door, taking me for a lunatic or a fool. I may have looked so, indeed. What I had heard was so terrible, so unexpected. She had lied, then. But why? Suddenly an idea struck me. I would go to the address of one of her pupils, of whom she was always talking, the daughter of a well known banker.

"Mme. Deloche," I began to the serv "She does not live here." "Yes; I know that. She is the lady who gives piano lessons to the young

"There are no young ladies in-the house-not even a piano. I do not know what you mean," and she closed the door in my face

I went no farther. I was sure of receiving the same answer everywhere. Returning to our poor little home, a letter was handed me, postmarked St. Germain. I opened it, knowing already what its contents were. The general did not know Mme. Deloche. He had, moreover, neither wife nor child.

This was the last blow. So for five years every word she had uttered had been a lie. A thousand jealous thoughts seized me, and foolishly, not knowing what I did, I ran to the room where she lay dying. All the questions which tormented me poured from my lips in a torrent of words. "What did you go to St. Germain every Sunday for? At whose house have you passed your days? Where did you stay that night? Come, answer me!" And I caught hold of her. searching through her eyes into the depths of her soul. But she remained

I was trembling with rage. "You never gave lessons! I have been everywhere. No one knows you. Come, where did you get the money, those laces, those jewels?"

She gave me one long, sad look, and that was all. I should have spared her, I should have allowed her to die in peace. But I loved her too much. Jealously was stronger than pity.

"You have deceived me for five years." I went on. "You have lied to me every day, every hour. You know all my life, and I know absolutely nothing of years. Nothing-not even your name! Because it is not yours, this name that you bear. Oh, liar, liar!"

She was dying, and I not to know what name to call her! "Come, now, who are you? Where did you come from? Why did you come into my life? Speak! Tell me something!"

Instead of replying she turned her face to the wall, as if she feared that her last look would give up her secret. And thus she died-died without divulging her secret, a liar to the end! -Translated For Argonaut From the French of Alphonse Daudet.

HANDLING BURGLARS.

Some Suggestions In the Gentle Art-Advantages of the Editha Method. A good way to handle a burglar is the Editha method, as outlined in the little one act play which had so much vogue here a few years ago, having been dramatized from Mrs. Burnett's story. All you have to do is to keep a 9-year-old girl in the house. She must have golden hair and appear to the burglar in her nightdress, saying to him in reassuring tones: "Don't be afraid. I won't hurt you." Then he will say, "Well, I'll be doggoned," and will enter into conversation with the child, the result being that he will find her to be his own daughter whom he has deserted years ago. On an easel will be a picture of his wife whom he left, and then his heart will be softened. He will leave the little girl a knife and fork and a spoon and will leave without disturbing you, carrying away nothing but $2,000 in silver, several hundred dollars' worth of jewelry and a grand piano, merely as a memento of how his better nature came to the front and made a man of him.

Of course if you have no, 9-yearold ex-child of the burglar in the house you will have to resort to other methods, but the above is the gentlest I can think of. If you wake up suddenly with the flash of a bullseye lantern in your face and feel the cold muzzle of a revolver at your temple while a hoarse voice says, "Make a sound, and I'll blow your brains out," a good thing to do is to clap the burglar on the back and say: "Go ahead, old man. My wife says I haven't brains enough to last overnight, and I would like to show her that she is wrong." That will disconcert him for a moment, and you can then take him down stairs and set out a good supper for him. Then show him where everything is, help him pack it up, and you will be all right. Some men keep a pistol in the house for the purpose of shooting burglars, but the burglars usually take the pistol first. Then a man has only his fists. Now, if I should wake up some night and see a burglar in the house I know that I should burst into peals of laughter, for it would be a good joke. The burglar might not see the point at first, but he would later and would realize that the laugh was on him. But if by chance there should be anything in the house worth taking and I should see two masked men bending over my couch I would merely knock their heads together until they were insensible, then tie them together into double knots and drop them down the elevator shaft. That is what most men would do when wakened from a sound sleep in the dead of night, and I may say that my language is merely symbolic of crawling under the bedclothes and making myself as small as possible until my visitors had

WOMEN IN ASHANTI.

They Do Not Wear Much Clothing, but They Have Plenty of Rights. The Ashanti women are treated with much more respect than other African women. They are really treated as the equals of men and are said to be very intelligent and energetic and shrewd in money matters. A wife's property is hers alone, the husband having no authority over it, and at her death it is inherited by the king. The women are the market keepers, and the men do the weaving and sewing.

If a husband disappears for three years, the wife may remarry, but even if the first husband returns the second marriage remains the more valid, but any offspring of the second marriage becomes the property of the first husband and may be pawned by him to defray his expenses. A husband who has a number of wives always has one as mistress of the house, to whom everything is confided and who is set over all the others. When the master is absent, she governs the others and takes his place. This house mistress, as she is called, is generally older than the others, and when she dies chooses one of the younger ones to take her place.

The king may have 3,333 wives if he wishes, but although his marital freedom is so great he has something to reckon with in the persons of his sisters, if he has any, for he cannot take an oath without their sanction. If his sisters marry, their husbands must sacrifice themselves on their graves, if they die first. The mother of a king is a regent, and she acts as such all through his minority and as long after his majority as she thinks he needs a guiding hand. All his life the king's mother is his chief counselor, and she also remains the trustee of the treasures left by the last monarch. In the same way, when a chief goes away from his province, his first wife takes his place during his absence, seeing to everything about run about the village striking flints together, but if a woman dies they short, and above either temple there tume consists of a single piece of drapery flung around them .- New York Advertiser.

DON'T STOP TOBACCO.

HOW TO CURE YOURSELF WHILE USING IT.

The tobacco habit grows on a man until his nervou system is seciously affected, impairing health, comfort nd happ'ness. To quit suddenly is too severe a shock to the system, as tobacco to an inveterate user becomes a stimu'ant that his system continually craves. "Baco-Curo" is a scientific cure for the tobacco habit, in all its forms, carefully compounded after the formula of an eminent Berlin physician who has used it in his private practice since 1872, without failure. It is purely vegetable and guaranteed per fectly harmless. You can use all the tobacco you want while taking "Baco-Curo," It will notfy you when to stop. We give a written guarantee to cur permanently any case with three boxes, or refund the noney with 10 per cent interest. "Baco-Curo" is not a substitute, but a acientific cure, that cures without the aid of will power and with no inconvenience. It leaves the system as pure and free from picotine the governing of the place. When a death occurs, the women sing a frenzied sort of dirge to the accompaniment of the flints. The Ashantis paint little patterns all over their faces, and they darken the corners of their eyes with a bodkin dipped in powdered lead. Their coiffure is most extraordinary, their heads being shaven, save for a small patch on the top. To the left side of this the hair is allowed to grow about ten inches long, and it is then drawn up into a cone shaped knot. Behind the left ear another patch is left, but on this the hair is cut is left a wisp of hair, which is divided into three parts. Their cos-
