COCKRAN ON SLAVEHOLDERS. | for the years to come-and save it we Will you submit to this conspiracy between the professional farmers, the farmers who cultivate the quarrels of their neighbhrs, farmers who labor with their jaws, Populist agitators of the West, and the unreconciled slave-holders of the South? This is a conspiracy between professional farmers, who want to pay low wages, and the unreconciled slave-holders, who would like to pay no wages at all .- (Extract from the speech of Bourke Cockran, delivered in New York August 18th.)

SAVE YOUR STATE.

The financial issue which is now the issue in our national politics and is engaging the attention of the people of this country from ocean to ocean, from the Canada line to the Rio Grande, as it never did before, is one of vast importance and demands the most serious thought and consideration. In common with the people of other States the people of North Carolina have taken a deep interest in it, as it is natural they should for they in common with the people of other States are vitally interested in having it settled and rightly settled. But there is another question, which has not been so much discussed, in which they are quite as vitally interested as they are in that and this who is to govern North Carolina and direct her destinies for weal or for woe? This is a question which comes home to us all, whatever our opinions may be as to the gold dollar, the silver dollar, the single standard or the double standard. We may differ, and honestly differ as to that, but among honest, true North Carolinians there can and should be no difference as to the party and the men who should rule North Carolina. This is a year in which ballots are mighty, for they are vested with a mighty responsibility. As they are cast so shall it be determined who shall be our Governor for the next four years, who shall be our Judges, who shall be our law-makers, who shall represent us in Congress, who shall succeed Pritchard in the U. S. Senate, who shall be county officers, who shall be our magistrates, so that this election has from the little township, through the various State offices, to Congress and the Presidency. This is or should be enough to stimulate the patriot. be enough to stimulate the patriotism of every citizen who values his franchise as a freeman should.

The opponents of the Democratic party have picked up hope and courage this year from the fact that by combinations two years ago and from court age this years ago and from court ago and the fact that by combinations two years ago and from court ago and the fact that by combinations two years ago and from court ago and the fact that by combinations two years ago and from court ago and the fact that by combinations two years ago and the fact that by combinations two years ago and the fact that by combinations the from apathy in the Democratic | This isn't putting a very high esti-

ranks then they won a victory and mate on the intelligence of the farmgot partial possession of the State. Having failed to effect a combine this year each of the opponents decided to give us battle, trusting to complications to win. We have the advantage this year of fighting a divided instead of a combined opposition, and we have the advantage, too, of having a party better united, more zealous and aggressive than it was two years ago, when thousands of disappointed and indifferent, if not disgusted Democrats remained away from the polls and let the election go by default. It would be a sad reflection upon the intelligence and patriotism of the conservative people of this State to suppose for a moment that they do not fully comprehend the importance of this election and the necessity of active effort to save the State from the calamity of falling into the hands of either of the opposition parties which are struggling for it and are not united now as they were two years ago because the Republicans, who used the Populists then and betrayed them since, insisted on having the better part of the spoils. As it is there has been bargaining and bartering in many counties between the Republicans and Populists who hope thus to control the Legisture and county offices, and control the election of Senator Pritchard's successor.

If they should succeed virtue of these combinations in counties to secure control of the Legislature, and the Republicans elect their candidate for Governor, which would be a dire calamity in itself, the Republicans would have control of the State machinery, and as far as the Populists are concerned would be masters of the situation and would plan to hold possession of the power they won, without further complicating entanglements with their Populist allies. With men who are as thoroughly unscrupulous as the leaders of the Republican party in this State are we know what this means, and we know that it would mean a great deal of trial, tribulalation, humiliation, unrest and oppression for North Carolina. They would go just as far in their efforts to retain the power they won as their courage and audacity dare go, for they would be under no restraint as to public opinion, which they never F. A. > If McKinley should be elected they will have the co-operation of the power at Washington, and will have its moral and material support in strengthening their lines and in carrying out their schemes to retain their grip on the State. With Republicans filling the postoffices, in ternal revenue offices and other Federal offices in the State, they will have zealous co-laborers in strengthening the Republican party for future contests, so that when we battle to save the State this time it is not to save it for this time only, but

MINOR MENTION.

There is a good deal of speculation and prediction as to the situation in Ohio and Indiana, and some of the other central Western States, the Republican figurers claiming that McKinley will carry them and the Democrats that Bryan will; but one thing is quite apparent and that is that the Republicans are basing their calculations very much on the votes in the towns and cities where they are scheming to control the workmen in shops and factories. In view of the counter claims the following extracts from a letter of J. H. Hylsop, a Republican canvasser in Ohio and Indiana, which appeared in the Indianapolis News, a Republican paper, is interesting as throwing some light on the situation in those States. He says:

"I was astonished to find so much detestation of Mr. McKinley. Old Republicans had seen through the follies of protection, and they condemned his administration in Ohio as the worst the State ever had. They have no faith in him, and would not support him on a free silver platform. I do not pretend to say that this feeling is general among the Republicans in Ohio who are going for free silver, but I did not talk with one of them who was not first influ enced by this view and adopted other arguments as a defense. Some even admitted that free silver would leave them just where they are, but they are tired of supporting a party that did nothing and promises everything. They took a malicious de-light in showing their independence after a lifelong slavery to party. Some even admitted that free silver might do no good, but they were not going to support a fraud or a weakling in the Presidential chair. It was impossible to nswer the accusations against the Re-ublican candidate, for his lack of policy or opinions. I never witnessed such contempt for a candidate, and nothing will remove it except definite proof tha free silver is worse than weakness and consuming ambition to be President."

Speaking of the extent to which the free silver "delusion" had spread among the farmers, he says:

"The universal cry was for better prices for farm products, and the coincidence between the demonstration of silver and the fall in prices is one fact that has seized their minds and no dislodgment of it is possible by any ordinary argument. The bucolic mind is peculiarly susceptible to arguments based upon coincidences, and it is not easy to demonstrate the post hoc fallacy to them. The best illinstration of this is portance. They plant their potatoes and certain other crops at a certain time of the moon and no argument can convince them of the folly of their notion, which

ers of those States, which have been boasting of their fine common school system, the beneficent effects of Republican rule and all that sort of thing, but it is about the average estimate that the gold standard men put upon the intelligence of the farmers of this country, who are not competent, according to their notions, to vote upon questions involving dollars, which these gold standard people seem to think they alone understand and they alone ought to settle to suit themselves.

There are very few, if any, of the advocates of the gold standard in this country who do not profess to be bimetallists, and anxious for bi metallism, for the free coinage and largest use of silver provided we can have "international agreement," that is an agreement by which the leading gold standard nations of Europe will consent to the coinage of silver. They say this while they realize the fact that no such agreement is practicable without the assent of England, and that there is no likelihood of England assenting because England's position on the money question is dictated by the money combines just as our financial policies for thirty years have been dictated and shaped by the money power in this country. Hence it is nonsense to talk about waiting for "international agreement" before this country takes action on the coinage of silver. Hon. Benjamin Butterworth, for several terms a Republican member of Congress from Cincinnati, is now supporting Mc-Kinley, as the result probably of a conference with that gentleman at Canton not long ago. Mr. Butterworth doesn't believe much in the 'international agreement" fake, for as late as last April he wrote to Senator Teller a letter which was read by the Senator in the course of speech made in the Senate, from which the following is an extract:

"Is it not folly to suppose that the capitalists of England—and they are the capitalists of the world-will be easily persuaded to agree or consent to bi netallism? Why should they? How is t to their interest to do so, while we consent to make it to their advantage to refuse? They have doubled the value of their credits by demonetizing silver, and thus in effect doubled the interest received by them.

"The United States blundered int the trap and within a year beggared a million of her citizens, and if we adhere to the blunder will beggar 5,000 000 re, and double the burden of every If it be said the United States cannot act alone the answer is, conditions are such that she must give notice that she will act with England if the latter conents; otherwise she will act alone."

If Benjamin Butterworth were a consistent, honest man, instead of a mere time serving, machine ruled partisan he would be supporting Wm. Bryan, as Senator Teller is doing, instead of Wm. McKinley, for this is precisely what the platform on which Mr. Bryan stands does, it serves notice that the United States "will act alone."

LINES TO A SKELETON.

Seventy years ago the London Morning Chronicle published a poem entitled "Lines to a Skeleton," which excited much attention. Every effort, even to the offering of a reward of fifty guineas was vainly made to discover the author All that ever transpired was found that the poem, in a fair, clerkly hand, was found near a skeleton of remarkable beauty of form and color, in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons. THE TALE OF THE ANIMATED JUG. Told by Captain O'Haver, the Prince Wales of the Memphis Police Force.

"Several years ago," the captain egan, "Bill Pryde and I had to go to Little Rock to appear as witnesses in a burglary trial. One mile this side of the town of Carlisle, Ark., there was a freight wreck. The cars were torn up, and the track was twisted. There were very poor facilities for clearing the track, and Bill and I saw it sticking out plain that we would have to stay there in the woods all day if we waited for the track to be cleared. We might have stood it all right, but we couldn't get anything to drink. So we inquired how far it was to the next town. We were delighted to find that Carlisle was only a mile farther. That was just like having drinks sent up to your room, and Pryde and I struck out down the track for the town. "We walked down the main street and then up and down all the others and never a place did we see where a man could get a drink. Finally we inquired of a citizen if there was a drop of liquor sold in the town. The man looked uneasy and said, 'Not since the local option law went into effect.' Then we tumbled. After walking a mile we had struck a dry town. There wasn't even any ice water. Pryde and I were both accustomed to looking for blind places; but, try as hard as we could, we couldn't find any hole that looked like a 'tiger.' Our mouths were as dry as bones. The day after local option carried in Carlisle the town well went dry out of sympathy. We were in despair, when we met a friend. He opened our eyes by telling us that we had been recognized. The story had immediately gone around the town that some Memphis policemen had been hired to come to Carlisle and run out the blind tigers. Ten minutes after we struck the town every blind tiger in the place was closed as tight as your fist, and the proprietors had all left the coun-

"Our friend said that while we were tapping on doors and looking into stairways some of the good citizens of the town were quaking in their shoes. However, he told us that he would put us on to something. He directed us to a little frame house in an isolated part of the town and told us if we would work the thing right we could get a drink there-in fact, several of

"We joyously started for the little house and bolted in. There was only one room so far as we could see. In the center was a table. On the table was a jug, a bowl of sugar, a pitcher of water and several glasses. Pryde and I walked right up and were just going to pour out a few fingers when right before our eyes that jug began to soar aloft. 'Grab it!' I hollered to Pryde, but it was too late. From the way the jug hung in the air I thought it must have a string tied to the handle. In a second it was out of sight."

"Well," put in the reporter, "the pitcher of water was still there wasn't it?"

The captain only indulged in pained look and continued: "Bill and I wanted a drink worse than ever then, for we had smelt it and almost tasted it. We were almost wild when Bill was struck by a happy thought. 'Blow your breath, George! Blow your breath!' he exclaimed excitedly. I found a quarter in my clothes and laid it on the table. You may not believe it, but the jug came back as if it had dropped from the ceiling. This time I distinctly saw the string tied to the handle. We poured out our stuff and were so thirsty that we did not notice half how bad it was. The rest of the story is short. Every time we wanted some more we laid down a quarter and hit the jug. After swhile we thought we and the jug were good friends, and Pryde suggested that we try and see if we couldn't work it without putting up a quarter, just for the fun of the thing. We voted down that scheme. however, for we were afraid the jug might get mad next time and not come back. Well, when we left we had fewer quarters, and the jug wasn't nearly so hard to lift by the string as it was when we came in.' -Memphis Commercial-Appeal.
