The Morning Star. SPOKE FOR HERSELF.

PLAINT OF THE HEROINE OF FICTION.

I once had lovely golden hair, Or raven hair—no matter which. I was as good and sweet and fair As any angel in a niche. Or, if I did a little wrong, It was to prove me human still. My feelings were extremely strong. But I had disciplined my will.

A change has come—and what a change With awful problems I am vexed, From crime to crime I reckless range, I know not what will happen next. From frantic woe to frantic bliss, From frantic wrath to frantic glee-I never wished to be like this!

I can't make out what's come to me Gone are my gayety and cheer, Gone is my hero bold and true, In my hysterical career I very often long for you!

Now me, all other woes above. My bitter destiny compels To wed a man I do not love, Then fall in love with some one else

Yet me how would you recognize, O Hero, if you met me now? What scorn would lighten from your eyes And corrugate your manly brow! The modern hero I have found. He's either stupid or unsound,

And if I were not worse I'd strike. Compelled too often to arrest
My headlong course by suicide And though I cease from guilt and slang

A fresh reprieve I fain would beg, For other authors seem to hang Theories on me like a peg. Ah, yet I long a little share

Ah, yet I long a little share
Of happiness and love to find.
Again I would be gay and fair,
Loyal and chivalrous and kind!
Ah! do not bid me rant and rave. Ah! do not bid me preach and bore. Give back my Hero, true and brave, Whom I shall love forever more.

THE PLOT SPOILED.

-May Kendall in Longman's Magazine

She was sitting in the corner of the carriage opposite to me, and we had got into conversation via the window, which I pulled down for her, and a magazine, which I lent her. She agreed with me that it was a hot day and that the magazine was stupid. A chance incident gave a more personal turn to the conversation. I took out my pocketbook to see that my ticket was safe and let a letter drop on the floor of the carriage. The letter was addressed to the Earl of Dunmore. Her eyes fell on it, and she looked at me with a pleased

"Is that you? Are you an earl?" she

Now I may at once state that I am no an earl, and that the letter was not ad-dressed to me, but was intended for my antograph collection. Yet she was pretty, and I thought she seemed pleased at the idea that I was an earl. The only other occupants of the carriage were two somnolent old ladies, who were not likely to overhear me, so I decided to be an earl, and condescendingly admitted the fact. "I'm so glad," she answered. "I did so want to meet a real lord." "I am gratified that my presence is any pleasure to you," I said, wondering whether she was an American or merely an ordinary radical. "You see," she replied, "I write a lit-"You're not going to interview me!" I exclaimed in real alarm, for the Earl of Dunmore might be a choleric man and the consequences unpleasant. things like that. I write novels." "A milder form of fiction," I suggested.

"Perhaps I've read your novels." "I'm afraid an earl wouldn't have read them. They only come out in penny editions," she said wistfully. "But I'm writing a serial story for a Sunday paper now. That's better, isn't it?"

"Much better. You're getting on," I replied, with increased interest in my com-panion, for I had long wished to know what kind of person writes penny dreadfuls. "But are you going to put me into the serial story?" "Would you mind much?" she asked.

"Well, if you don't give my name," I "It's awfully good of you," she answered gratefully, "and you can tell me a lot of things I want to know. You see, people who buy penny books like them to be about lords, and it's so hard to write about lords when you've never met one." "If I can be of any assistance," I said.

"Thank you very much," she said. Now tell me, are you a bad lord or a good lord? They're always very bad or very good, aren't they?"

"Generally," I said. "I'm afraid I'm one of the bad kind." "I'm so glad," she answered. "There's a good marquis in my story. He's the ero, and I can write about him pretty easily, because he comes to see the humble heroine. And there's a bad earl. He's the villain, and he lives in his castle, and that's what makes it so hard. How are "Oh, I'm pretty bad all round," I said.

'It's not necessary to be particular to a crime or two in drawing my character. I'm sorry that I can't tell you much about my crimes. The police, you know. That's "Oh, I like that," she replied. "I'll certainly put that in. But you might tell me about them. I wouldn't let any one know they were yours." "I am not alone in these matters," I said mysteriously. "I am sworn to a silence as deep as the grave. I wish I could be more explicit. Our crimes are so unlike the petty crimes of the people."

"Are you going to your castle now?" she

"No," I said; "I'm going to Kinton to stay with a man there. He's a mere commoner, but he's got money, and dice can be cogged, you know." "You play with cogged diee, do you?" she answered. "How lovely I'm going to Kinton, too," she added after a pause.

"Do you live there?" I asked, beginning to feel uneasy.
"No," she said. "I'm going to Mrs. Dawson's." "Mrs. Dawson's?" I inquired faintly.

'On a visit?" "No," she said, "I am going as maid to Mrs. Dawson. I was in service, you know; before I took to literature, and I generally take a place for my summer holiday. It will be jolly. I've never been at so big a house before."

I was very uncomfortable, for I was going to stay at the house too. It occurred to me at first to pretend that I was traveling incognito, but she would be certain to find me out. In all probabil-ity Mrs. Dawson would be in possession of the whole conversation in a day or two, and I should become a laughing stock. I am a shy man and averse to ridicule. Be-sides, for several reasons, I wished to produce a good impression on Mrs. Dawson.

I decided to make a clean breast of the whole thing to the young woman. When I had told her, she looked at me with unut-

"Then you're not a lord at all," she said. "And was everything else you told me just as untrue?'

"I am afraid so," I answered. "You ought to be ashamed of yourself," she went on. "You might have spoilt my novel altogether. I shall write to the Authors' society about you."
"I want you," I said, "not to tell any

I reasoned with her for some time, and eventually agreed to give her a sovereign down and three more if she kept the secret while I was at Kinton. We had only just concluded the agreement when we reached our destination. As we stopped, the young woman handed the sovereign back and said, with a smile:

"Mr. Trevor, you shouldn't pretend to be the Earl of Dunmore when your name "Hello, Lena, here you are," exclaimed Mr. Dawson from the platform. "How do you do, Trevor!" I didn't know you knew my niece."

"Please don't tell," I whispered.
"Of course not," she answered. "I have the eyes of a well bred countess." And she did not tell.—Exchange.

Other Use For His Jaw. Cannibal Chief-What have you for dinner today, love? Cannibal Chieftainess—The last lot are all gone but two typewriter girls. Have you any choice?

Cannibal Chief—No, my dear. That is a case in which I have no wish to dictate!

Martel du Bois, a young man of good family, but of somewhat limited means, was at the breaking out of the French revplution affianced to the daughter of a tradesman named Zoulouche-a man of wealth, but no principle. Celeste was pretty, artful, ambitious and treacherous, and when she thought it to her interest to get rid of her lover she secretly denounced him and he was arrested and thrown into prison.

Meantime a young widow, Mme. Romaine, who had secretly conceived a passion for him, on learning of his incarcera tion and its cause determined to save him. She went to the jailer, and by means of a bribe-for money was potent in those days as well as in these-obtained an interview. Du Bois was surprised at her visit. "I have come," she said frankly, "in the hope that I may save a life for which I would freely give my ewn." "I do not know as I understand you, madame!" replied the wondering prisoner. "Probably not, for I am a woman, and women are sometimes enigmas even to themselves. I will not ask if you know me, for you certainly do not, but do you know my name?" "Yes; you are Mme. Romaine, widow of Jules Romaine, daughter of Gustavus d'Auvergne-young, lovely, accomplished and rich." "We have ten minutes to converse in private. You must escape from here and fly from France! You may be tried at any hour, and, once tried, you will be condemned and executed.

"But who so base as to denounce me, madame? I would know the name of my enemy, that if ever I do escape I may at some future time exact reparation for the injury."

'Oh, perfidy!" exclaimed Mme. Romaine. "Prepare yourself, Martel du Bois, to hear a terrible truth. Where you trusted most you have been most basely betrayed. Celeste Zoulouche is your secret denouncer."
"Impossible!" cried Du Bois, staggering under the mental blow. "Impossible! Mon Dieu! You are but trying my faith." "We are wasting precious time," said the other, glancing at her watch. "Believe what I tell you. You will have corroborative evidence all too soon."

"Then welcome the guillotine! Why live in a world so treacherous and base?"
"But all are not like Celeste Zoulouche."

"Your own presence here, madame, is a proof of that. But my faith is shaken, and life seems of little worth." "We should not be too selfish," rejoined

Mme. Romaine hurriedly. "Live, Martel, or one of your friends will henceforth be "Is it so?" exclaimed Du Bois as the truth flashed upon him. "This is no time for false delicacy," pursued the other, with agitation. "Circumstances have caused me to betray feelings you otherwise might never have suspected

Let me but know you have escaped and are beyond the reach of your enemies and I can be happy, even should we never meet "Censure you! Despise you for trying to save my life! Oh, madame, your words

You will obey my instructions "Religiously. "Then, if your trial should not come on meantime, you may be saved. I go to vatch and pray and hope. Adieu!" He followed the directions of Mme. Ro maine, and the third day after her visit he was removed to the hospital. Here he fell under the charge of a lay-sister named

"I know all!" she said to him at the first opportunity. "Julie Romaine is my cousin: I am her confidant. We have agreed upon a bold and novel plan for your escape. It is this: You must seem to get worse and worse, and at last, at the proper time, you must feign convulsions and ap pear to die. I will cover your face, and when the chief physician comes his rounds announce your death. If he takes my word for it, all will be well; if not, we may fail. That is our risk."

"And suppose he leaves me for deadwhat then? 'Then, after dark, I will pretend to we received an order to have you conveyed to the dissecting room, where you will be provided with a surgeon's suit, in which disguise you must escape."

Near the close of his fourth day in the ospital Martel du Bois was seen by more than one person in convulsions. An hour or two later, when the physician made his ounds, he was covered with a sheet. "There is no more need of your services here," said Sister Agnes calmly, as she incercepted him. "The next patient seems vorse. Will you be kind enough to see him at once?" The doctor passed on. So far, all well. It was quite dark when the body of Du Bois was borne into the dissecting room. The attendants retired in haste, leaving Sister Agnes and a lad with him. "Now, then, here are your garments Onick!" said the fair nurse. In less than five minutes the late corpse looked like a very active and important "This lad will guide you—follow him!"

said Sister Agnes hurriedly. "Linger not a moment! Adieu! Adieu!" Five minutes later Martel du Bois, guidtd by a youth, was hurriedly passing through the streets of Toulouse. On the outskirts of the town the youth led him to an old stable, where they found two swift norses prepared for a journey.

They mounted and rode southward to vard Spain. When morning dawned, here were 40 good miles between them and Toulouse. The second night they entered Spain and were safe.

"Now, my brave lad," said Du Bols, 'go back to your mistress, Mme. Romaine, and tell her my hand, my heart and my life are at her disposal." "She will accept your hand and heart but begs you to keep your life," returned the youth, with a light laugh. "She will speak for herself!" rejoined Du Bois sharply.

"She does!" laughed the other.

"How is this?" "I am Julie Romaine." They were married in Spain, and at the close of the reign of terror returned to France and lived long and happily.—San Francisco Argonaut. Waltham Powder Works.

The description in an English journal of the royal gunpowder factory at Waltham would seem to show the establishment nore in the light of a world's fair than the prosaic plant that such a purpose involves. There are, it appears, some 400 acres of running streams, and electric launches ply between the different buildings, while cargoes of explosives are conveyed by sail barges in order to reduce liability to danger to a minimum. In what is known as the "danger building" there is a board set up across the threshold, which not even he inspector may step over without hav ing a special pair of large overboots put on his feet, to keep his shoes from track-ing grit from outside upon the felt carpet. In one part of the grounds is a pond into which the water from the nitroglycerin factory is drained, and once a week this extraordinary lake is exploded with a dynamite cartridge, to prevent too great accumulation of waste nitroglycerin-some ter that holes 20 feet deep are made and

HOMAGE TO BRAVERY.

Two Good Stories of the War Times of a Generation Ago. The Rev. Robert Wilson of St. Luke's Episcopal church says:

"In 1883 I met in Richmond a Colonel McCoy of Pennsylvania who had been a gallant wearer of the blue. We got quite bummy over'a 'mixed wood' campfire, and, wishing to put him at his ease, I told him the story of Kershaw's magnificent reconnoissance at Fredericksburg, which can never be too often repeated. An orderly had arrived in hot haste with a command for General Kershaw to have the enemy reconnoitered at all hazards from a knoll which was swept by the fire of the sharpshooters of both armies. Every bush and tree had been cut away by the storm of bullets, and it looked like certain death to the man who should attempt it. Calmly slinging his fieldglass and turning over his command to the next officer in rank, Joseph B. Kershaw rode slowly up to the death trap into which he would not send any other man. The sight of his herole action as he sat amid the whistling minies, sweeping the opposing ranks with his glass, was too much for the chivalry of the Yankee commander, and the order went down the Federal line, 'Cease firing on that officer.' The rifles became silent, the reconneissance was finished, and, raising his cap in acknowledgment, General Kershaw quietly rode back at a walk, un

"It was a splendid incident," remarked Colonel McCoy, "but I can cap it with a personal experience of the chivalrous disosition of your men. I was on General Meade's staff near Richmond, and one morning, with the general at our head, we rode down to take a look over the riv er. As we turned sharply out of the bushes and came out on the bank, we found ourselves in point blank range of a Con federate picket drawn up on the other side. A volley would have emptied every saddle, for we were entirely at their mercy, but it would have been murder, for they could not cross and capture us. Recognizing General Meade, the commander of the detachment ordered his men into line, and they presented arms. We raised our caps in grateful acknowledgment, rode slowly back into the bushes, and as soon as we were fairly out of sight put spurs to our horses and scudded back to the camp as if the devil was after us."-Charleston News and Courier.

Talk In Cumberland. "Whims" is the local name in Cumberland for furze and appears to be the Gaelic word quins, sharp points. "Heaf" is a very peculiar word (derived from the old Norse haefl, a share) and is applied to the part of a fellside common allotted to a particular flock of sheep. Each flock keeps to its own "heaf." Some very quaint expressions are "bride lof," a wedding cake; "seeing glass," a mirror; "clout hat," a woman's sunbonnet; "ridding out keam," a hair comb; "fireworks," a magic lantern display; "moley man," a mole catcher; "leg weary, tired; "leg up," to trip up; "sneck a clock. The verbs "feel," in the sense of to smell, and "lame," in the sense of to injure any part of the body, are peculiar. We may add "pipe stopple," the stem of a tobacco pipe; "buttock," a footstool; "tinkler folk." the gypsies; "last dress," a shroud which children are taught to work at school and afterward to present to their grandparents and other aged relatives-a kindly act, but one which betrays that lack of humor and sense of the ludicrous which is characteristic of northern folk. A Cumbrian who goes to have his photograph taken announces that he has come to be "struck."-Gentle-

up," to wind (literally to latch up)

The Sense of Color. According to Professor Hugo Magnus of Breslau, the visual capacity of sense of color varies not only with the individual, but with the civilization of a people. At first the human retina is insensible to colors, and only a gray, more or less clear, is visible. Later on-red and yellow are seen, these corresponding to light of the greatest wave length. Thus neither the ancient hymns of the Vedas, nor the Zend-Avesta, nor the Old Testament speak of the blue sky. Homer (as Mr. Gladstone remarks) and Ezekiel do not appear to have been sensible of all the tints of the rainbow. Zenophanes describes them as purple, red and greenish yellow. Aristotle adds the blue. In Hebrew and Assyrian the colors yellow and green and in Arabic blue and black are often confounded. Mme. de Remusat. Mme. de Remusat had features so perfect that her contemporaries said she was worthy to sit as a model for a Greek goddess. The flesh of her face closely resembled alabaster, and yet she was not pale and did not give the impression of being in delicate health. Her beauty attracted universal attention to her, no matter where she went, and even in old age she retained most of her good looks.
