FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE

KING EDWARD AND THE NEW YORKERS.

In his interview, published in the STAR Wednesday, Andrew Carnegie referred to the reception of the committee of the New York Chamber of Commerce by King Edward and remarked that it was significant of the friendly feeling of the British people for this country. Mr. Carnegie takes occasion, also, to remark that petitor.

he was instrumental in bringing about this meeting, which he thinks is so significant, so that it was in some respects a put up job and did not originate with the King. But having concluded to receive the New Yorkers he didn't put on any royal scollops, but received and treated them as a clever gentleman would treat visitors, who came by his invitation. This he seems to have done, as shown by the following expressions of members of the committee cabled to the New York Journal:

President Morris K. Jesup, of the New York Chamber of Commerce: said What impressions I have are of the most pleasant kind. It was my first meeting with the king, and I shall never forget it. He was affable and free, without losing dignity, and this may also be said of the queen.

Isidore Straus was also greatly impressed. "We were received by the king," he said, "in the same cordial and unostentatious manner as we would have been by a president in America. It was a genuinely Democratic greeting, and I shall remember it with pleasureable recollections. He held a conversation with practically every member of the delegation, and he made one as much at ease as if it had been an after-dinner talk with a lifelong friend.

"No, there were no controversia subjects touched on, as far as I know His Majesty seemed to say just the right thing in the right place. He was extremely affable in his welcome. Most of us, I think, will carry away delightful memories of our meeting with England's monarch.

lation of the most ingenious and aggressive people in the world, with unlimited resources to draw upon, against a much smaller number of comparatively plodding people, with limited resources, with the inevitable result that the smaller number with the lesser resources must surrender its place in the front line and drop to the second. This does not mean that England will play out and cease to be a potent factor in the world's commerce and affairs, for John Bull has tenacity, weather. is tough, and has a good deal of solidity in him, but it does mean that he must succumb to inevitable fate, and yield to his younger, stronger and more assertive com-cause of his death. This will take time, of course, for Williamson returned a few days ago John Bull will hold out to the last and surrender very reluctantly when he can hold out no longer, but the time will depend largely upon the policies pursued by this country. It tendent of the Edenton station. may be staved off indefinitely if we pursue the narrow methods which will array the commercial nations of the world against us, and thus by farmers seeing no hope of redeeming our folly play into England's hand.

A CHIP ON THE SHOULDER BUSINESS.

The Senatorial resignation episode - Goldsboro Headlight: Neuse iver is slowly resuming its old stand n South Carolina has resulted in nothing so far but the writing of some pretty tart letters by the reresigning Senators and Governor McSweeney. It didn't require much persuasion to induce Senator Mc-Laurin to withdraw his resignation, and as it was Senator Tillman's purpose in resigning to force the resignation of his colleague, of course he followed suit when he had failed in his object, but not until he had given the Governor "a piece of his mind," who, in return, gave the Senator a piece of the Gubernatorial mind. The result of all this is that the resigning sensation has culminaunknown.

A MOUNTAIN LAKE.

Oh, limpid listener, in your placid sou Of our boyhood resolved itself to an old Are mingled all be songs that brooks have sung When years and years, the shaggy hills among, They babbled of their trials, with foamy tears, of our boyhood resolved that to a out tree when we had courage to examine it. Manhood has its ghosts, which, to the man who has courage to confront them, prove to be as harmless as the ghosts of boyhood. One of the ghosts Until, all wearied, having reached their goal You softly soothed their sorrows and their fears.

Like sentinels the stolid mountains stand About you, dres't in garb of gorgeous green; At early dawn their mirrored shapes are seen a shimmering outline, painted by the sun, Upon your face, athwart the gleaming sand, for fade from view until the day is done.

A fitting figure of eternal rest You typify the changeless fate of man When, having coursed mortality's brief span Adown the hills of Time, his life shall end, And all his doings, be they banned or blest, Forevermore, with other deeds, shall blend. -John A Foote in Rosary Magazine

BUSINESS OF THE SOAKER

An Expert In Pawnbroking Who Has His Regular Customers.

In the neighborhood where pawashops abound the soaker flourishes. The soaker acts as middleman between the pawnbroker and his customers. He explains his mission and accounts for his usefulness thus:

"The people down here employ me," said he, "not because they are ashamed to be seen going into a pawnshop themselves, but because I can get more for the goods than they can. There's an art in pawning a coat or a ring, just the same as in everything else.

"I've known people to go into a pawnshop with some old article to pawn and to look the proprietor over with a supercilious air, as if they con-sidered themselves so far above him socially that he couldn't touch them with a 40 foot pole. Naturally, for sheer spite, the broker offers them only about half as much as they would get if they approached him properly. Having had a wide experience of my own, I know how to avoid such difficulties I am not servile, but I am polite and respectful, and as those two qualities touch the most generous chord in the broker's bosom I get all I want on the proffered chattels.

"As recompense for my services charge my customers 10 per cent com mission. I have regular customers and then, of course, I do many odd jobs for occasionals. There are familles down here for whom I nawn the same things over and over again, one week after the other. On pay day they take their things out of soak. Three days later they put them in again, and the next pay day they take them out again. And so it goes, month after month. I canvass the houses just like a book agent or corn plaster peddler or insurance solicitor.

"'Anything to be pawned today?"

"And if there is I take it eround to some shop and raise the necessary dough and take it back and get my commission. Once in awhile I come

QUAINT COLONIAL NAMES.

nists Were Christened. It is an interesting study to trace the underlying reason for many of the curious names which are given to the offspring of the first colonists. Parents searched for names of deep significance-for names appropriate to conditions, for those of profound influence presumably on the child's life.

The Rev. Richard Buck, one of the early parsons in Virginia, in days of deep depression, named his first child Mara. This text indicates the reason for his choice: "Call me Mara, for the Atmighty has dealt very bitterly with me. I went out full, and the Lord has brought me home empty.". His second child was christened Gershom - for Moses' wife "bare him a son and called his name Gershom, for he said I have been in a strange land."

Secretary George Wilson, of th New York Chamber of Commerce, said: "It would have been impossible for any one to have treated us with more consideration, or given us more cordial greetings. I can only say, with others, I am highly delighted."

These sovereign Americans seem to have been delighted and possibly surprised at such a gracious, un- ing to resign unconditionally, which -ceremonious, democratic reception by a British sovereign, but Edward is a democratic sort of a fellow and that wasn't the first time he was thrown into contact with Americans. He travelled around some in this country when a young man and thus early in life got to know some. thing about Americans by coming into personal association with a good many of them, and since then he has has met a good many in sporting circles and elsewhere and he always seemed to enjoy being with them. That was before he became King, but it isn't easy to change the habits of a life time all of a sudden, even after clapping a crown on. But some of the English papers are not altogether pleased at this royal recognition of these American traders which they construe as virtual admission that England was falling behind and will soon have to play second fiddle to Uncle Sam, rather a humiliating reflection for the proud Briton who has been so long feeling as if he was "cock of the walk" and high admiral of the seas. Editor Stead construes it a a virtual surrender, expressed in the following imaginary remarks of Andrew Carnegie addressing the English people:

"Nothing that you can do can even restore you to the pride of the place which you have lost, but if you will only make up your mind to recognize that you must henceforth play second fiddle to Uncle Sam, you can still comfort yourself by the thought that you are not likely to be beaten by anybody else."

Editor Stead concludes that th visit of this committee is naturally "regarded as an outward and visible sign of the final and irrevocable passage of the supremacy of Great Britain to her kin beyond the sea. That refers, of course to commercial supremacy, but commercial su premacy means power and that means supremacy in other than commercial lines. It means supremacy as an arbiter in the affairs of nations.

To the thinker who keeps his eye on the development, progress and movement of nations, there is nothing unreasonable nor surprising in this. This country out of the Speculation and Theft. Some statistician, in emulation of Lombroso perhaps, has been figuring out the habitual employment of convicts. He concludes that more men and women whose employers are the national, state or municipal governments fall into evil ways and come to entoward ends than those who work for private individuals or corporations. A very large proportion of the men and women who have been handlers of public moneys seem to yield to the constant temptation and begin to peculate, and some cynic avers that peculation is the corollary of speculation. As a matter of fact, most of the big and little thieves who confess how they were led to take money that did not belong to them declare that speculations of one sort or another brought them eventually behind the bars .- New York Herald.

A Point at Issue

Several of the lawyers had told their stories, some of which ridiculed the continued use of legal verbiage and the absurd lengths to which members of the profession sometimes go in taking advantage of technicalities.

"A' rank outsider," announced the member of the profession who had been a good listener, "a client of mine, supplied the best instance of literal in-terpretation that ever came to my knowledge. He was executor under a will that, among other provisions, re-quired the payment of an annuity to a venerable aunt of the testator. But proof of her being alive must be made before each payment, and this is the rock on which the executor struck.

"The old lady proved herself in the flesh, drew her money and went to California, where she spent two years without putting in her claim. On her return she went in person and demanded the double allowance due her.

"The conscientious executor got out the will, studied it, scratched his head and finally handed down his opinion: "'Madam, you are alive now. There can be no reasonable question as to that, for I have the conclusive evidence of my own eyes. But I am possessed of no legal proof that you were alive a year ago. I am, as you know, within the restrictions of the will. I will pay the annuity for this year, but must insist upon satisfactory affidavits that you were not dead when the preceding annuity was passed.'

"It took me the better part of a day to convince him that he should settle in full."-Detroit Free Press.

THE COMMODORE'S CUE.

When It Came, He Gave the Informa tion Wanted. In the early days of steamboating on the Ohio river they had only stern wheel boats, and old Commodore McCullough of Cincinnati conceived a scheme to build and launch a palace "side wheeler" which would by grace of her leauty and size "run the stern wheelers of of the trade." He carried his ideas to a successful and beautiful finish and sent her on her initial trip, and she came back $800 loser. The natives along the river would not ship on her nor would they ride on her nor trust their live stock on her. They "couldn't see the wheel go round." So the Flora Belle made tripafter trip, burning from $800 to $1,000 worth of coal and taking in perhaps $200. The newspapers took it up, and it was street talk about what a "frost" the Flora Belle was. Everybody from banker to bootblack knew the tale. At this time the old National theater on Sycamore street was the bon ton theater of Cincinnati, and its gallant men and lovely women thronged the performances. One night the commodore attended, and as he entered there was a series of nudgings and whisperings.

"There's the commodore! There's the owner of Flora Belle!" The play was one of those "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl," dramas, with a

"hyperbole" heroine, and there was one scene in which the lover proposed marriage. "No," said the heroine, "I can never be
