ABRAM S. HEWITT ON THE COAL STRIKE.

Abraham S. Hewitt, of New York, has recently published a communication on the coal strike which meets with the hearty endorsement of the friends and organs of the Coal Trust. His views give them the greater satisfaction because he is a Democrat, an anti-protectionist, and rarely says anything on public questions that they feel like endorsing but, in his views on the strike, he hits the strikers so hard that comes between him and the mine they not only endorse but cordially operator, so that as far as the law commend these views as something that renders inestimable service at this time, and are in striking contrast to the "sentimentalism" of the would-be arbitrators, as the New York Sun expresses it, "headed by the Hon. Marcus Alonzo Hanns and the Rt. Rev. Henry C. Pot-

From a purely legal standpoint, Mr. Hewitt is undoubtedly right when he asserts that the striking miners have no right to prevent by violence other men from working i they want to work because that i depriving those men of the right the law gives them to sell their labor to whomsoever they please. Essentially that, from a legal standpoint, is true. They have no right to forcibily prevent a man who wants to work from working, for that not only destroys a right that man has but it subjects his family, if he have one dependent upon him, to suffering and perhaps starvation.

But there are two sides to even this phase of the question. There is. if the accounts we receive from the coal regions be correct, a surplus of miners in that coal field For some reason the mine operators have kept more men about the mines than they had any need of at any one time. They never employed all, but so managed that all could have some work, enough probably to buy their food and pay the rent on the houses which the companies owned. All of these miners do not belong to the miners' union, and therefore those who do not do not feel bound by the action or orders of the union. These men are already in the mines, and many of them have families dependent upon their earnings for food and shelter. The union will not furnish these because the men do not belong to it. It is both cruel and unjustifiable to prevent these men from working to provide for their families, as has been done.

There is another side to it. No satisfied with this labor, which is not sufficient, the companies send elsewhere and offer inducements to men to come and work for them, although the companies know when they do this that they will meet with opposition in importing and putting those men to work. The men so imported were not driven by necessity to come into these mines, to get between the mine operators and the striking miners, take the places of the latter and help to reduce their families to starvation. They go into the strike region knowing this, for frequently before they get into it they are put under the protection of bayonets, so that when they come and leave employment upon which New York, by rail and water, with they could live, they voluntarily only 70 hours on water, in 100 hours, agree, tempted by a little higher wages than they were getting, to underwork the striker and help starve his wife and children. That's the view the striker takes of it, and that by playing footpad. Three of them is his justification. It is with him a made a unanimous bounce upon an matter of self-preservation, which unsuspecting white denizen a few makes it necessary for him to use intimidation, and violence when intimidation fails.

Mr. Hewitt has stated the law correctly, and unfortunately the law is all on the side of the mine HOW THEY CARE FOR THE TOILER.

President Roosevelt does not fail to distribute a good deal of taffy among the working men as he swings around in New England, and he will not fail to do it when he swings around other sections. The working men of this country have lots of votes, and if these votes can be caught with cheap taffy it will be a decidedly good trade for the taffy striker can enforce his contention | man.

It is somewhat remarkable, however, that this warm, brotherly interest in the begrimed, "hornyhanded sons of toil" develops only periodically, just before elections, cooling down in the intervals, and put in cold storage, as it were, for future use. Perhaps some of the aforesaid sons of toil may have caught on to this. In the sanctimonous epistle to the Pennsylvania citizen who a short while ago wrote to Mr. Bear of the Reading coal road praying him to "close the strike on a Christian would simply fill the places of the basis," he assured this citizen that the elect to whom Providence, in His great wisdom, had given possession of the coal mines would look after and care for the toilers who toiled for them. How they do this for some of them, at least, is shown by the following extract from an article in a recent number of John Wanamaker's magazine, descriptive of the Pennsylvania coal region and the condition of its > miners: "They live in houses built of sheet iron and boards, about 15 feet square and sunk about 3 feet in the ground. Of course there is but room, and in this room the family-anywhere from 5 to 10 humans—cooks, eats and sleeps. Although there is plenty of space, these hutches are crowded together like troopers' bunks on a transport. ·The streets are so narrow one may almost touch a house on either side simultaneously. Behind these hutches stretched a great heap of ashes—the dump from the furnaces that ran the engines, a reddish-brown heap, packed hard by the rain. For obscure parts of it were yet hot, and steamed under the contact of the veil of wet. And this mass, in cooling, threw off a stench like that of burning bones; an acrid, foul odor, sweet with a nauseating, revolting sweetness, powerful, unesca-pable, that pervaded the entire com-

The State inspector of Pennsylvania, who recently returned from a tour of investigation in the Shenandoah region, pronounced it "the most God-forsaken country I ever saw." Now where is there room to doubt that the elect to whom the Lord has given these coal mines will duly and considerately care for the working people in their jurisdiction? Doesn't the evidence, omitting the strikes altogether, show how they are doing it?

When the young men reached her, they saw no one at all, but the door was open and there was unmistakable sign where some one had crawled under the house. On Saturday she seemed to be in her usual health, but very nervous. That night after she had gone to bed and had fallen asleep, they heard her struggling and when her bedside was reached she was dead, Some fiend may have entered her room, and the shock may have caused nervous prostration sufficient to produce heart failure, caused by the ravages of disease, in either case, it was indeed a sad affair.

To Broil Bacon. Broiled bacon is a dish which in few households deserves the adjective, because it is seldom broiled; the fat is fried out of it and again soaked into it by long sputtering in a spider full of grease.

The only way to cook bacon-both for the matter of appearance and for digestive qualities-is to broil it, not over a bed of coals (it is too fat for that), but in a very hot oven. Cut the bacon in the most delicately thin slices possible, rejecting the rind. Lay the pieces close together in a fine wire broiler. Place it over a dripping pan and set in a hot oven. It requires to be turned just once. The fat which falls into the pan makes excellent drippings for frying potatoes.

Drain the bacon on brown paper If you wish to serve calf's liver with this, sprinkle the liver with pepper and salt, roll it in flour and fry brown in the bacon drippings. Serve with curled morsel of bacon on top of each piece of liver. Bacon as served by the average cook, well soaked in grease, is the most indigestible of food; when broiled crisp in the oven, it is a dish that may be served even for a child of two years with impunity. Among all the fats delicately crisped bacon ranks next to cream in ease of digestion.

Spinach. Spinach derives its name from the Spanish monks, who first used it during fast days. It belongs to the beet family and is generally served as vegetable, although it makes a delicate and appetizing salad. In the spring, when mint is fresh and green, a few leaves added to the spinach will improve the flavor, whether it is served as a vegetable or a salad.

COTTON MARKETS.

By Telegraph to the Morning Sta

NEW YORK, Aug. 29. - The cotton market opened steady at a decline of four points under the pressure of disappointing cables and strong intimations of rains in moisture-needing localities. After selling to the basis of 8 22 for January, however, the market commenced to improve on better indications from Liverpool which market finally closed with the net loss reduced to 1@2-64d, where at one time the English decline had been a matter of two to four points. Buying orders came with the improved market cables from Europe. The general run of private crop news continues to be very bullish, notwithstanding the forecasts of rain, some for that matter buying cotton on the theory that rains in the present condition of the crop would depreciate the grade, however it might increase the quantity of cotton. Buying was quite general, though not of large volume, with orders from the West, the South, New England and Wall street. The local contingent covered short contracts, room sentiment having been heretofore rather bearish on the rain prognostications. Sales to-day 350,000 bales. The market at best prices showed an advance of five to ten points on positions later than August which at one time showed an advance of twenty-eight points. The market was finally stead y at a net rise of one to six points.

How About That Tackle?

The blue birds are with us again. The streams and ponds are warming up. The fishermen should be looking up their outfits. Seeing if any thing is wanted before the last minute.

As of old we are showing the finest things to tempt the fish kingdom and make the sport more sporty for the anglers. Lines may be wanted; poles must be needed; hooks are very necessary, and in fact we have everything that is required to make a complete outfit. To those that are interested in the sport, to those others that may not be so enthusiastic, we would consider it a favor to have all come in and look.
