THE LOST BILL

[Original.] My moth r died when I was eighteen year old and my father married again. My stepmother soon had children of her own, and it was to her interest that I should not marry and rear a family, for she had arranged with my father that if he died before I had issue I was to have but a small fraction of his estate. If, on the contrary, I married and had a family, I was to have half. I did not think Mrs. Mendicott so deprayed as to commit any overt act to keep me from marriage, but believed she would foster any circumstance that might lead to that result. She had a governess for her children, Adele Trimball, a sweet, patient girl of strong character, with whom I fell in love. As soon as Mrs. Mendicott discovered the situation she gave Miss Trimball notice that she would dispense with her services.

The day before her departure she came into the library, where I was sitting, very much discomposed. "What is it?" I asked. "George," she said, "Mrs. Mendicott has made up her mind to keep us apart by ruining me." "How do you know?" "Know! I've seen through her from the first. What do you suppose she has done? On going into my room just now I found a twenty dollar bill on the floor before my dressing table. Mrs. Mendicott put it there in the hope that I would take it and she could accuse me of stealing it." "What did you do with it?" "Left it where she placed it. I wouldn't touch it with a pair of

"That won't do. I'll go and get it." I hastened to the room and looked all over the floor, but the bill was not there, nor could Adele find it when she went to look for it. Mrs. Mendicott announced that she had lost a twenty dol lar bill in Adele's room when she went there with her purse in her hand to put some clothes in the empty bureau drawers. She left us all to draw our

I did not propose that Adele should rest under such an imputation. I questioned my stepmother, not telling her that I had been warned in the matter, and she convinced me that she had not herself taken the money from the room. I questioned the servants, but gained no clew from any of them till I came to Joe, the colored manservant. I looked Joe in the eye and saw there a sly shrewdness that convinced me of his guilt. I searched him and his room but found nothing. Then my father came to me and in sisted that Miss Trimball's effects be searched before she left the house. I protested, but without avail. The bill was not found, but more money was in her possession than it was believed she had, for she was very poor and her salary had been very small. At any rate, Mrs. Mendicott convinced my father that Adele was the thief, and I box guaranteed, 50c. and $1.00. All was informed that if I married her would be disinherited.

What would it avail to tell my father that Adele had seen the bill in her room and told me of it? Such a statement would not be believed and would only widen the breach. Either Mrs. Mendi cott had taken the bill herself or some one had gone into the room in Adele's absence and taken it. I inclined toward the latter opinion. I must either find the thief or lose my patrimony, be sides seeing the girl I would marry remain under a cloud. I lay awake the night of Adele's departure thinking out some plan of investigation, but could hit on nothing. I believed that Joe had appropriated the bill, but since he and his effects had been searched there seemed to be nothing more to

One Sunday evening Joe came home smoking a cigarette. He had a cob pipe in the stable which he smoked when off duty, and I had sometimes seen him smoking a cigar, but never before a cigarette. I had been watching for him to possess something new which he had bought with the money I believed he had taken. "Joe," I said. "have you another cig-

He pulled out a package and handed it to me. I took one, looking into Joe's face as I did so and noticed that he appeared anxious. Lighting the cigarette, I puffed awhile, then said: "These are fine, Joe. Where did you in the shop in conference with the tobacconist to find out if Joe had offered a large bill for his purchase. I was disappointed. The boy had paid in small change.

Later I went out to the stable, where found Joe enjoying his pipe. "Have you another cigarette, Joe?

"No, sir; I smoked 'em all up.' "What! Smoked ten cigarettes in a "Whom did you give them to?"

"I gave 'em to"- He could get no further. He was cornered. "What makes that lump in your vest pocket?" He looked down at the pocket, while putting my thumb and finger into it, drew out a paper case half full of cig-

I felt sure I was on the scent and did not waste any time. Taking a cigarette from the case, I pulled it to pieces. There was nothing in it but tobacco. I tried another with the same result. I broke up four without finding anything, but when I tried the fifth could not break it. Tearing the wrapper, I uncovered green paper and in another moment had unrolled a twenty WARREN R. ATHERTON.

Where Men Eat to Live. The Trappist monks consider eat-The Trappist monks consider eating to be a necessary evil and curtail it to such a degree that one step further would be suicide. Dinner, to which scarcely fifteen minutes are devoted, consists of a mess of vegetables boiled in water without butter or salt and served in a crude earthenware bowl, a alice or two of rie bread without butter and a mug of milk or water as a beverage. Supper is the barest apology for a meal, being nothing more than bread and water. The guestthan bread and water. The guestmaster did not mention breakfast. If there be such a meal, it probably condists merely of a glass of water. slight relaxation of this dietary is allowed to invalids, who may have two eggs a day, while on extraordinary occasions, such as a funeral feast in honor of a departed friar, the monks revel in an egg apiece. They are strict vegetarians, and a Trappist must be in the very jaws of death before he will consent to eat meat.—Lippincott's.

His Little Bill "The senator from New Jersey reminds me of one of those ferocious Newark mosquitoes," I heard her remark to a gentleman by her side with eyeglasses and thin hair in one of the senate galleries. "How so?" queried the man, putting his ear closer to her and looking as if he expected something real brilliant. "Because he seems to be forever pushing his little bill."-Yonkers States-

Fierce Head Hunters Of Luzon Mountains

Far back in the mountain fastnesses of Cagayan, in upper Luzon, is a tribe of irreconcilables known as Kalingas, or "head hunters," from their horrible practice of cutting off the heads of all their prisoners. An interesting sketch of these bloodthirsty people is contained in a recent account of an expedition into their stronghold, under the spector Geere. "are non-Christians and very primitive people. Their intelligence is of a limited order, though they are sharp shrewd, lithe and active. They wo a good deal amons themselves. They never sleep a night, in order t guard against at tack. Their methods of attack are by stealth, burling a spear from the dense 'cogon' at the unsuspect ing traveler, step ping into his tracks from conwith a pinapacave edge and a long hook behind to nid in climbing mountains. The head of the victim is then backed off with this ax and carried to the village, where it is placed on a pole planted in the earth, around which they dance, feasting in their houses for nine days."

Strikes a Rich Find.

"I was troubled for several years with Chronic Indigestion and Nervous Debility," writes F. J. Green, of Lan-caster, N. H. "No remedy helped me until I began using Electric Bitters, which did me more good than all the medicines I ever used. They have also kept my wife in excellent health for years. She says Electric Bitters are just splendid for female troubles; that they are a grand tonic and invigorator for weak, run down women. No other medicine can take its place in our family." Try them.
