WILLIAM H. BERNARD. WILMINGTON, N. C.

SUNDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 1

THE COST OF CONGRESSIONAL

SUPPORT.

If it is true that United States Senators and other eminent leaders have been bringing their "infinence" to bear upon President Roosewelt to save political friends from the legitimate consequences of official irregularities and violations of the law, the fact calls for plain talk. The Federal Constitution imposes upon the President the duty of making appointments with the advice and consent of the Senate. As a matter of fact, the Senstors of the party in power ordinarily centrol the distribution of Federal patronage from their several States, with the exception of that portion of it which is reserved for the benefit of Representatives belonging to the same party, "The courtesy of the Senate" permits no posching on any Senator's preserves. The "advice of the Senate" now amounts to a command, which the President can only disregard at his peril. The government of the United States is not a parliamentary government precisely in the sense that the government of Great Britain is; but the President understands that he can accomplish comparatively little if he cannot command the steady support of a majority in Congress. The party of the administration in the Senate and in the House will go very far to carry out his views of public policy, provided that he, on his part, proves equally complaisant. The whole arrangement is one of give and take. Mr. Cleveland, who had had no experience in Federal politics when he was first elected President, manifested what the Senators of his party, and the practical politicians generally, regarded se an unseemly and dangerous inappreciation of the merits of that timewas that he incurred their active hostility. They could not prevent his renomination either in 1888 or in 1892, but they went as far as they dared to attack his popularity

Mr. Roosevelt does not intend imitate Mr. Cleveland's course in that respect. He does not underestimate the value of patronage as source of influence, and has shown himself not above using it where he thinks it can strengthen him politically. His alliance with Addicks in Delaware leaves no room for doubt on that subject. He was at one time a police commissioner in New York city, and at another a member of the Federal Civil Service Commission. In both positions he was regarded as friendly to civil service reform. But in those days there were no appointments at his disposal, and he was free to make a reputation as a public spirited citizen of enlightened views and a progressive worker in the field of theoretic politics. His own [personal relation to the conduct of public affairs has undergone a great change, and he has altered his attitude accordingly. But people still prefer to believe that he means well, and though he has become a thoroughgoing professional politician, and, above all, a Roosevelt man in politics, that his sense of personal honor and of public duty would never permit him to countenance or condone any fiagrant violation of the laws which he has sworn to execute. But if Senators of the United States or other high officers of the Federal Government have undertaken to stay his hand in the punishment of effenders they must have formed a very different estimate of his character, for only an unscrupulous man, or a very weak one, could ignore the paramount claims of justice and of the public interest in such a case for any consideration of mere party expediency, and still less with a view to holding his own personal supporters well in hand.

and to defeat the policies which he regarded as most urgent.

A partisan civil service, bad as it is, has its more or less plausible defenders; but who will undertake the defense of a criminal civil service? No one can say precisely what degree of truth there is in the reports which have been circulated in regard to efforts made by prominent men to check the investigation of irregularities and fraudulent acts in Federal offices or to prevent the punishment of any notorious offen- man who thinks himself a born der against the law. But it has been made plain enough by actual experience that the tendency of a strictly partisan system is to fill the offices of the various departments with men who have been trained to take a venal view of public life, and whose sense of obligation reaches no higher than the immediate source of their appointment. To work for his party and to work most of all for the man who puts him in, that is the obligation which the placeman recognizes. Strange to say, however, there are many thousands of good people, honest men of all parties, who insist that the winning party ought to have the offices, and who are prepared to incur all the losses and perils incident to the execution of that policy rather than abandon the doctrine that to the victors belong the spoils. Swil ! Is not that word enough in itself to degrade the popular conception of the public service ?-New Orleans Picayune.

On his recent trip to Chicago Mr. Cleveland spoke of making his son a bridge builder. The Griffin (Ga.) News thinks that if little Cleveland were a bridge builder he might repair ome of the bridges that his father has burned, upon which smart observation the Savannah Press makes the following pertinent comment: "The pontoons that the old man destroyed were generally of very worth-

WORRIED ABOUT ANN'S AGE.

(Salisbury Sun.) Down at the passenger station this morning Salisburian going out of town for the day was asked what he thought of the weather pros-

"Weather?" he asked. "Why, what is weather? Have we sny? have known of nothing for a few days but how old is Ann? That girl's age is driving me crasy. Every paper I pick up has something about Ann's age. I cannot I am going to run down to the Mecklenburg fair to see if there is not something there that will get this thing off my mind. But the plague-take it thing keeps running through my brain. 'Mary is 24.' That is all right; I don't care a continental about Mary. It is poor little Ann whose age is worrying me. 'Mary is twice as old as Ann was'-let me see-how does it go-'as Ann was when Mary was as old as Ann is now. How old is Ann?' That all sounds easy enough, but I can't figure it The man who mentions this to me again is going to get knocked down, and I will try to crush his life out. I picked up a Charlotte paper to read about Dr. Jay's case and the first thing I saw was a picture of people trying to solve this problem. 'Mary is'-but blessed if I will discuss or think of this thing any more. Newspapers ought not to be allowed to print such matters. It is sending more people to the asylums than all the liquor that was ever sold."

- Tarboro Southerner: J. C. Powell's stock of hogs will compare favorably with any in this section. For years he has been improving the breed. When Petree attempted to take it from him the gun exploded, throwing the whole load of shot into his stomach. Petree is not expected to

- Raleigh News and Observer A good story is told on Mr. M. J. Wrenn, of High Point. It is related that on Wednesday of Fair Week, while on the grounds here, in Floral Hall, he was spied by Capt. Rankin, a fellow townsman, who thought he would have some fun. The captain alipped up behind Mr. Wrenn and did the pickpocket act, putting his hand in Mr. Wrenn's pocket. latter, without ever looking up, seized Captain Rankin's wrist, and a life and death struggle began. For awhile it looked serious, when Mr. J. J. Farriss, editor of the High Point Enterprise, finally succeeded in getting Mr. Wrenn to look at the "Pickpocket," when he collapsed. It is further stated that Mr. Wrenn had in his pocket an old fashioned 3 cent piece and a button, and the dollar he borrowed that morning.

Getting Rich in Mining. Two brothers. Chuck and Ferdinand. started out to get rich in the mining business. Chuck went to the mountains and tried to find gold. He prospected for years, leading a fife of flardships and privations. He never discovered any gold and was finally killed in snowslide. Ferdinand organized stock companies to develop "sure thing" mines, in which there was no gold. He was superintendent of the Sunday school and induced way up church people to indorse his schemes. The sale of stocks in gold mining companies made him a very rich man, and he presented the city with a water fountain and was voted a public benefactor. It is not always necessary to mine gold in order to get it.-Atchison Globe.

How to Make Salads. A salad should always be properly washed, not in one, but at the very least in three or four waters. It should then be carefully dried leaf by leaf. It is impossible to produce a successful salad if the green stuff in question is in the least degree damp. Again, a salad should never be cut with a knife, not even a silver knife. When washed and dried it should be torn into pieces of a suitable size. Thirdly, the oil and vinegar used should be in the proportion of two spoonfuls of the former to one of the latter.

How to Clean Silk Dresses. A little ammonia in a few teaspoonfuls of alcohol is excellent to sponge silk dresses that have grown shiny or rusty, as well as to take out spots. A silk, particularly a black, becomes almost like new when so soonged. A. . Mariamen
