BIG NAVAL STORES WAR AT END.

naval stores in and around Wilmington have been greatly concerned in the big naval stores fight which has been in progress at Savannah-we shall say-although it covered a wide scope of country taking in Georgia, Florida. Alabama and as far west as Hattiesburg, Miss. It even affected Wilmington and the Carolina turpentine regions, for Savannah is regarded and is in fact the naval stores centre where prices are fixed and the greatest bulk of business is done. Wilmington formerly held that position but year by year the yellow pine forests have been exhausted and for some years past the centre of the industry has shifted to Savannah.

We started out, however, to say that the "big naval stores war," as it is called, has come to an end. The fight was between the exporters' combination on one side and the Naval Stores Export Company, which was organized by the naval stores operators or producers, on the other. What is known as the "exporters combination" is composed of S. P. Shotter & Co., and three other exporting companies known around Savannah as "The Big Four." The four companies allied their interests in the fight and against them were the thousands of men engaged in manufacturing spirits turpentine, rosin, etc.

"To the naval stores trade at large the end of the fight, which began with the organization of the Naval Stores Export Company some six months ago, means that there will be more settled conditions in the market; to Savannah the open market policy at Jacksonville and Fernandina, the chief ports, means that this city is more firmly than ever entrenched in the position of being the naval stores or indirectly all by "Golden Medical Discovery."
