

THE LOVE OF SAND.

Unconscious Harking Back to Primitive Times. The love of sand is universal, felt by all at all ages. The child finds in sand a ready and plentiful material for something of definiteness to the imagination, and his childish imagination, and his experience shall have proved the world to be less pleasant and not so desirable in sand he nevertheless as possible man tacitly admits the attraction of the old time medium and his holidays upon it. No water need trouble as to its presence if it has a broad forefront of sand.

It may be readily concluded that man would not have long in finding out the advantage of a dry cave as a dwelling. It would be found most readily in the friable rocks. The natural expansion of the cave to the growing demands for house room, the creeping down of roof and sides, the result in a sanded floor. Litter and cave living and housekeeping are more easily swept out with the bough or bunch of sedges than as the original broom when with sand than without its aid. A savage family which swept its floor with sand certainly be the healthiest and most thoroughly clean.

ST. ANTHONY.

Temptations of the Father of Monasticism. St. Anthony was one of the greatest names placed on the calendar. He is called the father of monasticism because his life and teachings really the foundation of the monkish orders of a mediaeval age. He was born in a city of Egypt A. D. of parents who were both pious and rich, and he early determined to give his life up to religious contemplation. He went into the wilderness, taking up his solitary abode in a cave on a high hill, where he devoted himself to austerity. But his meditations were interrupted by a series of sadly irrelevant temptations, believed to be sent by the devil to tempt him aside from a life of prayer. He was visited successively by all the idolatries of the world, by the princes and potentates of history and their wives and children, by Solomon and the queen of Sheba, by the gods and goddesses of Greece and Rome, especially by Diana and Venus, and other interesting deities. According to the legend, St. Anthony at last breaks the power of the visions, and they leave him in peace. He remained twenty years in the desert, then, yielding to the wishes of other anchorites, went to the city and there founded the first monastery, which was little more than a group of cells. After six years of solitude he returned to his desert life and at last died there at the age of 63 years. The French novelist Gustave Flaubert has written an entire novel on "The Temptations of St. Anthony," giving all his visions with elaborate description. A decided skeptic, not to say profane, poem has the same title and in the style of "Ingoldsby Legends" is somewhat included with these humorous legends. But Barham did not write it. The work of one Tom Sellers, a superior scribbler.—Housekeeper.

Aspirant of Legal Terms.

Bill Tom—Why did Bill plug underfoot? Bed Pete—It all come o' Bill's ignorance o' legal terms. How 'uz that? P.—Well, Bill owed the short-term money an' was sorter slow sayin'. So the stranger writ him sayin', "I will draw on you at a day, so when he meets up with the stranger he draws first. It was a understandin'."—Cleveland Leader.

Sponges Are Propagated.

There are a great many things which scientists of today are not able to explain and a great many others over which they have frequent discussions to a difference of opinion. The question by which sponges are propagated is left to themselves is one of the mooted scientific questions. It is declared that they are reproduced by eggs; others are equally positive that they are propagated from spores.

Your Heart.

The heart of man resembles a secret which when stands, like the block of an unknown marble set in the hands of a sculptor, a veiled figure. The man may not so much as the corner of the veil, yet must he know and in secret work to fashion the form the figure that lies beneath.
