I premise what I wish to say by stating that I have never taken part in a prize game of cards, but believe, from observation that it is, in the great majority of cases, honorably conducted. To denounce this form of amusement as a species of gambling appears to Only Small Crowd Witnessed Spirited me absurd and illogical. Why not include the system of prizes and rewards in schools, which is precisely parallel? The very essence of the evil of gambling lies in the inevitable consequences of loss to one or more of the parties engaged, whereas in this social game, it is quite different-each she entered it.
