Philadelphia Record, Dem.

1876 the National Democratic party demanded a thorough reform of the tariff as an essential measure for the relief of the people, for the promotion of industrial prosperity, and for the sake of better administration of government. The question was not complicated at that time by any side issues. There was not then an enormous surplus of $100,000,000 in the Treasury that had been wrung from the people by needless taxation. The tariff was arraigned as a gigantic iniquity in itself. There was no attempt then to dodge the great question, and no cry was made for a repeal of the fiscal taxes on whiskey and tobacco in order to escape from the duty of tariff reform.

But now the necessity of reforming the tariff has been intensified by giving the President an insidious the condition of the national finances. Unless the Treasury surplus shall be speedily abated the drain of currency from the centres of business will threaten the country with financial disaster. And thus the tariff system, with which the Democrats of 1876 boldly grappled because of its inherent iniquity, has become complicated with no less important question of financial reform. In order to relieve the public finances of a dangerous plethora President Cleveland and a great majority of the Democrats in Congress favor untaxed raw materials of manufacture and substantial reductions of duties on the necessa-

Ded Russ Proof Seed Oats. As the planting season is now near and the new crop of Red Rust Proof Seed Oats is well on the market, merchants would do well to con-sider the causes which contribute to the failures in the Oat Crop so frequent of late years and which have been attributed to cold weather, droughts, &c. Being the largest shipper of Red Rust Proof Oats in the South, and having consequently a most extensive correspondence in that line, I am prepared to state on the best authorities that these failures are due to In-ferior, Light Weight, Half Growm Un-matured Seed, which cannot start a root sufficient to stand the least cold or dry weather, uor would they make a good crop under the most favorable conditions. The localities where the Gennine Red Rust Proof Oat is raised are subject to severe cold and long droughts, yet they seldom have a fail-ure, as they plant only the Beest Seed.
