

of the globe where there was more Southerland and asked him if the checks real enjoyment of life, more comfort had never given them. and more content and more solid happiness than in the ten Southern States. The South was then what might be called a purely agricultural section, the spirt of speculation had not crossed her borders, her people, generally speaking, were comfortably situated, with incomes more than sufficient to meet all their moderate wants. They believed in a rational enjoyment of life and were never happier than when sharing their abundance with those they liked or with the wayfaring stranger, to whom they were always hospitable and kind. With slaves to cultivate their fields and a sure demand and market for their staple crops they were sure of a competence and could afford to take life easy. Free spenders, and good livers, liberai and generous as a rule, they sought the sunny side of life and got all the enjoyment there was in it.

Of course the revolution which overturned the old order of things has duanged this to a great extent, for with the new order came new methods and combinations of circumstances which put an end to the old custom of taking life easy. The nature of our people has not changed but their conditions have, and they can no longer indulge their tastes and inclinations with the same freedom as they did in the olden time. Who will not say that - our people then did not live to better purpose than they whose life is spent and souls jeopardized in the eager pursuit of coveted dollars? Money is a good thing to have, for without it one has a pretty rough-and-tumble existence here below, but it should be sought as a means, not an end, something to utilize and enjoy, not to hoard. When its pursuit becomes the chief object in life and hoarding it the chief pleasure, then there is a life perverted, wasted, and the money is not good. The steamboat stoker who earns his bread not only in the sweat of his face but of his whole body, is a happier man than such a man and lives to better purpose. We believe in progress and we believe in wealth, the progress that makes the world better while it makes it richer, and the wealth which brings comfort and blessings to its possessor and benefits to others We want to see our Southland become progressive and rich in this way, but we do not wish to see the day when her people will forget in the days that are passed, and let of Broughton and Houston streets. the pursuit of riches become an en-
