QUEEN ANNE COTTAGE.

Chaste and Pleasing Design For a $2,800 Dwelling.

[Copyright, 1893, by American Press Association.] Unless great care is taken in the selection of the plans the cost of a building frequently exceeds the first stipulated limit of cost, and the result is disappointing to the owner and unpleasant for all concerned. Queen Anne houses cost more than colonial or hybrid designs of the same area of plans, especially where elaborate details are re-

PERSPECTIVE VIEW.

Here is a neat little house which may be classed as a simple treatment of a Queen Anne cottage. All the room is used to good advantage, and the building is well finished throughout, with a cellar under-neath the whole structure and a good fur-nace which sends ample heat to all the principal rooms.

The foundation walls are of stone laid up in cement mortar. Above the foundation walls the structure is of wood. Side walls and roofs are sheathed with tongued and grooved stuff and covered with waterproof sheathing paper, clapboarded in the first story, with side walls in the second story and all gables and roofs shingled with best quality white pine shingles. There is a wide veranda across the front and along one side of the hall. This veranda is roofed by extending the main roof of the building over the same. The lower ends of the rafters rest upon a strong plate, which is supported by neat columns in keeping with the style of architecture. The space between the columns is ornamented by a railing in harmony with the whole. In the first story are three large rooms in addition to the staircase hall, which is separated from the parlor by a sliding doo

A $2,000 Cottage Which Combines Both House That Has a Surprising Amount of Simplicity and Beauty.

For simplicity there is nothing which can excel the old colonial style of architecture, Here are plans and perspective view of a neat little cottage, which, while plain in appearance, will be found by inspection of the floor plans to be conveniently arranged and so economically that quite a considerable accommodation is had at a very low cost. Reasonable people do not expect that a small and cheaply built house will appear as handsome and pretentious as an ex-pensive dwelling, yet there is no reason why a cheep house, no matter how small it may be, should not look neat and cozy and be comfortable also.

A pretty story and a half cottage well built is more desirable than a more pre-tentious design poorly constructed. Here is an example of a simple design for a 7-room cottage suitable for the country or a suburban lot. You enter the house from the front porch, through a small vestibule, into the parlor. To the left of the parlor is the dining room. These rooms each have an octagon front, which gives a very pretty appearance to the exterior of the building and a very pleasing effect in-side. To the rear of the parlor is a bed-room furnished with an alcoved fireplace.

A bathroom, fitted with tub only, is located between the bedroom and kitchen. The kitchen is not large, but is conveniently arranged and provided with china closet, sink excer the old colonial style of architecture, for it is based upon principles which will never wear out. This style is especially adapted to cottages 1% stories in height. By a careful study of the plans and perspec-tive view here shown it will be seen that all available space has been well utilized, while the exterior is attractive enough to suit the most fastidions.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW. The arrangement of the principal rooms in the first story is convenient and sensible and could not, for the same space, be im-proved. The staircase hall is of fair size and communicates with the parlor on the right by means of sliding doors. The parlor in the same manner is separated from the dining room, all arranged so that the three rooms may be practically thrown into one when desired. The chimney which carries off the smoke from the parlor fireplace is built partially on the outside of the house, thus making a picturesque feature of the exterior without taking up any space in the parlor. In the arrangement of the kitches, pantry, clos-ets, cellar stairs, etc., there is nothing especially new. The veranda railing is made close by first studding up and sheathing and shingling the same. The top of this railing is capped by a heavy plank, upon which the columns which support the story above rest.

The design is somewhat after the English The design is somewhat after the English style of architecture, with a hipped roof prettily broken by gables and dormer win-dows. Although quite simple in outline and details, the open timber cornices and heavy projections give a strong effect of shadows which are most picturesque. A veranda extends across the front of the building, with a handsome gabled porch to emphasize the main entrance. hall, which communicates directly with the dining room, parlor and library. Under-neath the stairs is a closet, which is indispensable for coats, etc. The parlor and dining room are separated by sliding doors, and the library is shut off by an open-ing which is intended to be hung with heavy portieres, or if desired, with a little extra expense, sliding doors could be fur-nished. The principal rooms can on state occasions be thrown open as one large room. From the dining room you pas through the pantry to a fully equipped kitchen, with all necessary plumbing fixtures, store closet, stairway to the cellar and back porch complete. In this case the bathroom is off the kitchen and has the usual fixtures. Some might object to hav-ing the bathroom in the first story on account of its not being so private nor convenient as it would be to place it in the second story, as is the usual case. The arguments in its favor are that it costs much less, it is easily kept warm, clean and comfortable and is more easily supplied with water in cases where there are no

FIRST STORY. ner is shut off from the dining room thus making it possible to utilize the entire space in the parlor, hall and dining room when desired. The special feature of the hall is the handsome staircase with a pretty stained glass window over the lower landing. Stained glass may be pretty without being expensive. Amber colored glass, with small corner pieces of ruby, is a simple combination, but very rich in interior effect. The staircase and all woodwork in the hall are of selected dry ash. The parlor and dining room are finished in chestnut, selected for its beauty of grain, all thoroughly kiln dried. The floors in both stories are of yellow pine, as is also the kitchen woodwork. The doors in the first story are of ash and chestnut finish. All wood work in the first story is filled with a good wood filler and varnished two coats with best coach varnish and rubbed smooth. The woodwork and doors in the second story are of white pine painted in two coats. The inside walls and ceilings in both stories are hard finished on two coats of plaster, with ornamental center pieces and cornices.

SECOND STORY.

The exterior of this cottage is well broken by gables and dormer windows, which, with the long sloping line of root which extends over the veranda, give a most pleasing appearance. The roofs are painted a venetian red; the shingles in the second story and clapboards in first story a light drab, with dark drab trimmings, with moldings and sash picked out in bright red. The effect of the whole is chaste and pleasing to people of refinement. If so desired, a comfortable bathroom could be added in the second story at small cost. The hardware in the first story is bronze; in the second story bronzed iron with jet knobs. This house, with heat ing, etc., and bathroom complete, would cost about $2,800. Without the bathroom it could be built for $2,500. JAMES DUNCAN.

The Advantages of Double Houses. For the same amount of money invested two houses treated as one structure will cost less than two detached dwellings and afford an opportunity of securing a more imposing and attractive exterior. When erected upon two full city lots, it allows greater space for light and air on all sides. Furthermore, the design may be arranged so that each house shall have separate entrances and quite as much individuality as detached dwellings. They also possess some advantages over the latter. They are warmer, and consequently require less expense in the heating apparatus,
