The Model Basque 1s the Foundation of All Waist Cutting-The Three-quarter Cont-A Few Simple Hints on Tailor Effects.

(Copyright, 1895, by American Press Association.]

The three-quarter coat is a very fashionable shape this senson, and it is, with allo shape this standard, and it is, with equally suitable for winter and early spring and for the young and the middle This coat can be easily drafted from the model basque lines. The back is out in exactly the same way, and so are the side and back gores. The dressmaker decides upon the length below the waist and carries her line down to that measure and makes a mark, allowing a proportionate flare toward the bottom. If the skirt to the coat is intended to be full, what is two inches at the waist line should be ten at the bottom. In cutting the center back pieces, when taking out the slant, leave a og 214 inches below the waist line, which to be lapped and finished like men's coats, with two buttons. All the rest of the scams are sewed and pressed apart. If the material is very thick, the edges of the seams are bound with lutestring dress binding, but if not very thick it should be fined. The lining should be sewed up like the outside of the back and basted along down the sides. The fronts are to be cut on the lines of the basque model, but an inch larger, as this is to go on over another dress, or at least a vest. Only one dart is to be taken up in the front. The fold in front of the waist is made 3 inches wide, and this gives width for a double breasted effect. A seam may be taken down the front of the outside lap if desired, and the buttons are set on each side of it. Pockets may be put in or not, as preferred. They are so very difficult that the amateur may do well to mit them.

The lining to the front being basted in, it is to be hemmed neatly over that of the back, and then the bottom of the back is turned up and hemmed on to the lining with an inch deep hem, which must be well pressed like every other seam. The lapels are cut as per diagram and lined with hair-right or buckram, and the back is faced with silk or moire, while the front is of the named. terial. In some cases both sides of th lapel are alike and neatly tailor stitched. They are sewed to the edge of the front on he outside and neatly hemmed on the underside and turned backward and pressed into their position, and when the sleeves are in they may be tacked fast, as they are apt to fly in the wind. folds or stables. The collar of these coats can be of almost any kind that the wearer prefers, but that best liked just now is the high roomy stalls and generally are not conturned down shape. There is a diagram fined by halters. Others are tied up. giving the shape of one of these, the dotted sometimes in single or double stalls. ine showing where it folds over. It should le exactly the right size to meet at the ton and flare naturally at the bottom. It hould be interlined with buckram and the under part lined with silk. The outer really looks best when made of the dress dreds in a single fold, but this should material and tailor stitched, but a rather more dressy effect is obtained by adding a relvet collar to that, leaving the material o show. This requires great care, and he velvet should be sewed over a foundaion of wigan and then slip stitched on. The sloeves to all the three-quarter coats we large gigots, and for the wearer's comfort and ease in getting it on and off the sleeves ought to be lined with silk. The lining need not be as large as the sleeve, titions. but a medium large coat shape. The wrists are finished with three rows of A very sich effect is given to such a coat by sewing soutache braid all over the coat n set design or in vermicelli pattern, the braid standing on its edge. The sleeves of the Roman II when the head is in. I cannot be quite so voluminous in that Prince Albert coats are quite a rage just w, but it is a fancy too liable to change or a lady to make up her coat in that way. If, however, she wishes to obtain that effect, a couple 'of lines of very narrow soutache braid defining the waist line to a short point front and back will simulate a seam there, or a wider braid can be used. In that case the two buttons in the back are omitted. The lining of the coat should be stitched to the edges of the flap side, the general natural positionin the back and turned forward and pressed while lying down or while standing lown before basting in the hem. The lining in the front is sewed to the edges in he same way and turned back and pressed before finishing the bottom or hemming down the front and back under the arms. The sleeves may be plaited or gathered to sew them in. The edges of the seam should be overcast together and bound and not pressed. A tape loop under each arm to lang the garment up by and an ease belt are necessities. The belt fastens in front by lapping over and being pinned. Hooks and eyes admit of no loosening. The buttonholes should be very strongly worked.
